Over the Union Pacific
Plenty of Beer
Pigs, Corn, Prosperity
Best Minds Worry
—By Arthur Brisbane—

Lyndyl, Utah, May 2—This return trip from the Pacific to the Atlantic is being made over the Union Pacific. Its building was authorized by President Lincoln on July 1, 1862. It was rebuilt, made one of the world's greatest railroads by the late E. H. Harriman, a constructive American to whom the United States owes gratitude.

The first part of the trip, by auto from W. R. Hearst's ranch at San Simeon, along the edge of the Pacific for 100 miles and then for 200 miles across the desert, would please youth which wishes to believe that things "wild and western" still exist.

They would have seen after dark dozens of tall ghostly jack rabbits hopping about the desert roads, confused by the headlights, and, lurking at the side of the road a gray coyote that seized one and darted like a shadow into the desert. Such tragedies establish nature's balance. Without destructive enemies, rabbits would destroy all crops.

Beer invites attention obstreperously everywhere. Across windows of a lonesome desert gas station you see written with soap in enormous letters, "Plenty beer." Five cents profit on a pint of beer is better than two cents on a gallon of gasoline.

The port of Los Angeles announces heavy gains in imports, largely beer. In the month of April Uncle Sam's customs collections at the port increased $50,000, thanks to beer from Canada and Mexico.

Once bootleggers would have got the $50,000 multiplied by 10 with beer at $1 a bottle. Mexico ships "from the second largest brewery in the world" beer, "Carta Blanca Pilsner Mexicana" and names it "Exquisitia."

E. J. Steinheuer of New York and Rockaway Beach, Long Island, who tried the beer when urged by Frank M. Hauser of Santa Monica, says "it is exquisitia all right."

The Union Pacific takes travelers to see many wonders. To Old Faithful, the big geyser, to the high north rim of the Grand Canyon or off to Mt. Rainier, looking down, forever snow covered. And from Los Angeles eastward you travel through great food producing regions of the United States. Across California, through Nevada, where five thousand sheep bleat and graze beside the track, through Utah, past the Great Salt Lake, on through Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and into Chicago, where the great exposition opens on June 19.

Geysers that rush upward, Yosemite Falls that drop down, grand peaks, deep canyons, palm trees and eternal snows contrasted are all very well. But for prosperity the corn fields that produce our greatest farm crop and pigs and cattle that eat the corn are the important features of this journey.

The Salt Lake Tribune brings the morning news, meets you half a day out of Salt Lake City.

There is trouble to the south. Luis M. Sanchez Cerro, president of Peru, is assassinated while reviewing 30,000 troops. One man can do what 30,000 cannot prevent. The murderer was seized, "hacked to pieces," by soldiers and police.

Gandhi announces a new "irrevocable" three weeks' fast. He tells his son, Devidas, who begs him not to risk his life again, that he is fasting "to purify his soul" and protest against untouchability and the caste system. Poor Gandhi, kept in jail by the British, would not seem to need any other soul purification. He represents pathetically the uselessness of Theodore Roosevelt's "words without deeds."

From Washington high finance learns with groans that it is living under a "highbrow" government willing to try anything once, and listening to a college professor as readily as it would an experienced political boss.

The nation has started many things in a hurry, to be digested at leisure. One of them not expected so soon is nationalization of labor. If laws requested are passed the government will have power to raise wages in one place, force them down in another.

The Democratic party will have power if it chooses to give a good imitation of Mussolini or Stalin.

Arthur Sears Henning says the G. O. P., meaning Republican gentlemen who recently ran the country, are filled with alarm about a "dictatorship" and believe "the independent authority of Congress is doomed to be snuffed out like that of the Italian Parliament and the German Reichstag."

There are marked differences between Mussolini, Hitler and President Roosevelt and, anyhow, many Americans will suggest that a dictator living in the White House might be no worse than a dictator doing business in Wall Street.

GUARDS TAKE BANKER OUT OF JAIL TO COURT

Faces a Longer Prison Term in Wrecking of Industrial

There is no rest for the wicked—and Edwin T. McKnight is on trial again.

Sentenced yesterday to six or seven years in jail and prison in Middlesex County, the 69-year-old president of the collapsed Medford Trust Co., was removed from the East Cambridge House of Correction on a writ of habeas corpus today and taken to Suffolk Superior Court to stand trial for his alleged part in the failure of the Industrial Bank Trust Co., of Boston.

He is charged in 30 indictments with conspiracy to violate the banking laws, and if convicted he may be sentenced to a much longer term in jail. Yesterday he was given two years in jail, to be followed by four or five years in state prison. Any new sentence would follow the prison term.

OTHERS PUT ON TRIAL

Others are Charles B. Strout, former president of the Industrial; Henry D. McKnight, Charles H. Bucek, Harry L. Loftus, William J. Worthington, J. Waldon Pond and Fred B. Walter.

NO BREAKFAST FOR HIM.

The writ releasing McKnight from jail for his new trial was issued by Judge Cox at the request of Asst. Dist. Atty. John J. Murphy after all the defendants except Mc. Knight and Tellstrom had appeared at the courthouse.. Trial was as-

HITLER PLANS GREAT ARMY OF YOUTHS

Rich and Poor to Be Drafted in Service of Fatherland

Berlin, May 2 (AP)—Chancellor Hitler's brownshirts, by surprise and storm, took the last hurdle today on the road to Nazi domination of the labor movement by occupying headquarters of the Free Trade Unions throughout Germany.

Socialist leaders of the unions which have 8,500,000 members, were arrested.

The raids followed announcement that Hitler proposes to draft every German youth, rich or poor, in a great army to be trained physically in service to the Fatherland.

There will be no exceptions made in the enrolling of this huge disciplined force, he declared last night in further explanation of his long-advocated compulsory labor program. As originally disclosed by him two months ago, the plan is aimed to wipe out all class distinctions in Germany by what he termed the "ennobling and purifying" process of labor by hand.

UNIONS TO BE NATIONAL

In connection with today's raids Nazi leaders said the unions are to be made nationsl rather than international in character.

In Berlin, the Nazi storm troops occupied the national headquarters of the unions and the gigantic building of the Metal Workers Union which has 827,000 members and it is claimed it is the largest labor union in the world.

Prominent leaders arrested are President Theodor Leipart, Vice-President Peter Grassman and Rudolph Wissell, former minister of labor. Grassman was labor's representative in negotiations leading to adoption of the Dawes plan.

TWO HELD IN HOSPITAL

As Leipart and Grassman are both ill, they were held in a hospital.

The Social Democratic party's four remaining Reichstag and Prussian Diet members have been leading a shadowlike existence, totally devoid of the influence which was their when they belonged to the dominant party in Germany. Their vast propaganda apparatus, including hundreds of newspapers, already have been outlawed.

All minor officials and employes of the labor unions, it was said, will be admonished to continue work in accordance with the needs of the national revolution in order that social democracy might definitely be crushed.

200 on Dole Get Jobs, Quit Aid

Walter V. McCarthy, secretary to the Overseers of the Public Welfare, announced that after checking over the records of his department, it was found that in the past two weeks 200 men and women, the majority of them heads of families, had asked that their names be striken from the welfare rolls because they had obtained employment.

This has reduced the number on the welfare rolls to 32,325, which is still higher, however—except for when the other 200 were on the list—than ever before in history.

This good news came on the heels of charges and counter-charges of welfare frauds, made in the city council chamber yesterday.

Councilor John I. Fitzgerald charged that public welfare had become a political racket, costing the city $20,000,000 a year. Clement A. Norton, councilor from Hyde Park, joined in denouncing the welfare department, and claimed 600 of 800 bootleggers in his district were on the welfare list.

LONDON SAYS ROOSEVELT IS GOING THERE

Reported Planning to Attend Sessions of Economic Parley

London, May 2 (INS)—Reports that President Roosevelt may visit London during the forthcoming world economic conference caused great excitement in British official circles today.

Although it was impossible to confirm the reports, which were denied by White House spokesmen in Washington, Whitehall circles expressed belief an address before the conference by President Roosevelt would greatly enhance its efforts to combat the world economic crisis.

It was understood that Prime Minister MacDonald, now en route to London from Washington, informally suggested that President Roosevelt come to London while the conference is in progress.

MEETING THURSDAY.

MacDonald is scheduled to report the results of his Washington conversations at a cabinet meeting Thursday. The regular Wednesday cabinet meeting will be postponed at his suggestion.

The general belief here is that one of MacDonald's first proposals will call for acceptance of the American proposal for a tariff armistice "in principle" on grounds that the tariff will not interfere while carrying out of new trade agreements or hamper existing pacts.

It was also understood that the American administration had instructed Norman H. Davis, chief of the United States "floating embassy," to confer with MacDonald and Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon, urging upon them immediate acceptance of the tariff truce be proposed before the organizing committee of the world economic conference.

RUNCIMAN WINS.

Walter Runciman, president of the British Board of Trade, defended the Anglo-German trade agreement and the British Government's policy of continuing to make tariff treaties despite American efforts for an economic armistice.

Runciman threatened to resign if a motion introduced by Sir Austen Chamberlain to delay ratification were passed.

Fearing Runciman's threat might upset the government, the House of Commons voted 269 to 80 defeat for Sir Austen's motion.

REPUBLICANS IN HOPELESS FIGHT AGAINST INFLATION

Democrats Maneuver to Force Final Vote Tomorrow

Washington, May 2 (INS)—A hopeless battle against the inflation rider to the farm bill was waged in the House today by Republican leaders, who frankly admitted their chief hope is to 'educate" the country to the dangers of uncontrolled expansion.

After bickering with the Republicans, during which they changed their position, Democratic leaders agreed to delay final vote until tomorrow to give the Republicans a chance to assail the measure in debate.

Representative Snell of New York, Republican leader in the House, called up his big guns to carry on the attack against the vast power granted the President in the inflation rider.

AMENDMENTS BARRED

The net effect of the Republican fight—unless a deadlock results from administration opposition to Senate amendments to the farm relief sections—appeared likely to be a delay of President Roosevelt's signature to the bill until Thursday or Friday.

Although Democratic House leaders acceded to the Republican demand for time to discuss the measure, they insisted upon a special rule which bars the right of amendment.

Snell and his followers announced they accepted the provision giving the President power to request the Federal Reserve Board to pour $3,000,000,000 into the purchase of government bonds to expand credit and thus stimulate business.

SECTIONS OPPOSED

They assailed provisions permitting the President to reduce the gold content of the dollar by 50 per cent, issue $3,000,000,000 in treasury notes and accept up to $200,000,000 in silver in payment of foreign debts.

While the conservative leaders denounced the measure, many of the rabid inflationists in the House attacked the proposal because it does not go far enough.

The "silver bloc" in vain sought the right to offer an amendment for coinage of vast quantities of silver while the "bonus bloc" likewise clamored without success for the right to include cash payment.

Rep. Steagall (D.) of Alabama, chairman of the House banking committee, was designated to lead Democratic forces for the inflation proposal.

Law and Lawlessness

Public officials sometimes say, "We cannot stop Racketeering because its victims are afraid. They will not testify against the Racketeers."

And that is true. But why are the victims of Racketeering afraid?

Because the Law has too often neglected to do its duty.

Consequently, the false idea exists: Pay the Racketeer and live; appeal to the Law and die.

But if Racketeers can be terrible, the Law can be MORE TERRIBLE.

Let the Law wake up and go after the Racketeers as it should—and people will no longer be afraid.

ROOSEVELT TO RUSH WIND-UP IN CONGRESS

Plans With Leaders for Adjournment Soon After June 1

Washington, May 2 (AP)—President Roosevelt and congressional leaders are combining for a quick windup of the extra session of Congress, with the first week in June fixed as the goal.

Already involved in international negotiations for further world recovery, Mr. Roosevelt will be giving attention almost exclusively after June 12 to the London economic conference, and it is his desire to have the domestic program well rounded by then.

Within a short time the last two of the President's major emergency proposals—railroad reorganization and a public works program to aid employment—will be sent to Capitol Hill.

Senator Robinson of Arkansas, Democratic leader, pointed to the June adjournment last night after a conference with the President and outlined a preferred calendar of business.

This includes the Tennessee Valley-Muscle Shoals bill now before the Senate; the Home Mortgage Refinancing bill passed by the House; securities regulation, the railroad and public works measures.

Robinson said the 30-hour work week bill, passed by the Senate but jammed behind opposition in the House, "is not in the picture at the moment." It was emphasized later that this did not mean that the White House had withdrawn support for this legislation.

Rather, the administration is counting on framing it as a basis for legislation to extend federal supervision over industry and wages.

WALSH PUTS IN BILL TO AID BUSINESS

Would Ease Anti-Trust Laws to Eliminate 'Cut Throat' Trade

Washington, May 2 (US)—Promotion of business recovery by amending the anti-trust laws to authorize industries to enter into voluntary trade agreements, under federal supervision, and thus eliminate "cut-throat" competition, is proposed in a bill by Senator David I. Walsh (D.) of Massachusetts.

Walsh announced the bill has the approval of business organizations and expressed the hope it would have the support of the administration.

PROTECTION FOR LABOR

He declared economic reconstruction could not be completed until the federal government struck down the anti-trust barriers to business revival.

The bill, which would enlarge the powers of the Federal Trade Commission, is designed to encourage planning in industry by permitting co-operating, and at the same time protect agriculture, labor and consumers. It would provide full exemption of agriculture and labor from the anti-trust act so as to enable them to hold their own with industry.

"YELLOW DOG" BARRED

One section, which Walsh believes will appeal to labor, provides that industrial units entering into permitted co-operative agreements must not use "yellow dog" contracts and must abrogate all existing ones, Walsh said:

"My bill does not contemplate governmental price fixing of goods or commodities, but recognizes that exorbitant prices and oppressive practice must not be permitted.

"It permits the approval of agreements voluntarily entered into subject to government supervision over the reasonableness of the prices charged and the practices to be resorted to."

RHODY VOTE 7-1 FOR REPEAL

Providence, R. I., May 2 (AP)—Rhode Island, third state to vote on repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment, today stood firmly in the anti-prohibition column.

Wisconsin and Michigan already have voted in favor of repeal.

Only one Rhode Island community, the town of Hopkinton, voted to retain the amendment as the electorate 150-244 to 20-874—named 31 repeal-pledged delegates to the state convention May 8. Hopkinton voted 310 to 293 against repeal.

Rhode Island, which never ratified the 18th Amendment, and was commonly known as "wettest of the states," had state prohibition for three years. Repeal was voted in 1889.

An unusually active campaign had been carried on by the prohibition leaders, who attacked the recently enacted beer and liquor control law which permits saloons for the sale of beer.

Hoarders of Millions in Gold Defy U. S. to Get It

Washington, May 2 (INS)—Openly defying the Treasury to enforce its call for gold, attorneys representing clients with several million dollars of the precious metal in effect, said today "try and get it."

It was contended that the act of March 9, providing authority for the secretary of the treasury to call all gold and gold certificates is unconstitutional.

One lawyer, who declined to disclose the identity of his client, said that about $150,000 in gold coin was hid din a safety deposit box of a New York bank.

"I have already conferred with Treasury officials and have informed them that we have no intention of returning the gold to the Federal Reserve Bank," the attorney said.

"My client is not an American citizen and is not now in the United States. We shall do nothing, of course, until the Treasury turns the matter over to the Department of Justice and some action is taken to obtain the gold."

Thus far the Treasury has not indicated specifically what will be the procedure to recapture gold, except to say that an effort would be made to get all gold hoarded in excess of $100 back to the Reserve Banks and Treasury.

Between $600,000,000 and $700,000,000 in gold and gold certificates remain outside of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Banks.

FIND GIRL DAZED SPEECHLESS

Dazed, and unable even to speak, an unidentified girl, about 24, was found today seated on the steps of a house in Barry st., Dorchester.

She was taken to City Hospital, but physicians were unable to gain any speech with her. They said they believed she was suffering from shock.

The girl is 5 feet 9 inches tall, weighs 135 pounds, has gray eyes and brown hair and wore a print silk dress, a red coat with fur collar and cuffs, black pumps and tan stockings.

SWANSON URGES BIGGER NAVY

Washington, May 2 (US)—Confidence that President Roosevelt will include $46,000,000 for new ship construction in his public works program was expressed by Secretary of the Navy Swanson after a lengthy visit at the White House.

Meanwhile, he indicated that no naval training will be cut off in the pending $54,000,000 slash in naval operating expenses, but that all naval training done by the country probably will be closed.

Swanson is urging the administration to build a number of cruisers, destroyers, submarines and other auxiliary warcraft to bring the Navy nearer to the 5-5-3 ratio provided in existing treaties.

LINDYS PLAN WATER HOP

Los Angeles, May 2 (AP)—Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh, who arrived here last week on an inspection tour of facilities of the Transcontinental Air Line, of which he is technical advisor, probably will make their return trip to the East on a flight over water.

It was learned the colonel expects to order the installation of pontoons on his low-wing Lockheed plane held here since the damage it sustained while the famous couple were flying in the Orient in 1931 had been repaired.

Friends of the couple here believe the Lindberghs will return home via the west coast of Mexico, the Panama Canal and fly eastward across the Gulf of Mexico to the Atlantic coast.

Lindbergh spent several hours yesterday conferring with aircraft engineers who are building new flying equipment for the line he represents.

F. D. PLANS TRIP TO WORLD FAIR

Washington, May 2 (AP)—President Roosevelt is trying to arrange to get to Chicago to open the World Fair there in June; and he also plans to spend most of the summer away from Washington.

He has agreed to go to Annapolis on June 1 to deliver diplomas to the Naval Academy graduating class. The Chicago fair is scheduled to open that day; but it was said today that if that were postponed a day or two, the President might be present.

Mr. Roosevelt wanes to see his son John graduate at Groton school in Massachusetts early in June. He also has an invitation to visit Rutgers University to receive an honorary degree.

If Congress gets through in time, he probably will visit both Groton and Rutgers. Then go to Campobello, his mother's camp near Eastport, Me., for a couple of weeks before returning to his home in Hyde Park, N. Y. to stay through most of the hot season.

Good, Secretary of War in the first year of the Hoover administration, has been found in probate court to be worth only $79,832.76 after claims had been deducted and an allowance made for depreciation of stocks. Good died November 18, 1929.

CONNERY WAGES 30-HOUR FIGHT

Washington, May 2 (INS)—Indignant over the inference made by Sen. Robinson (D.) of Arkansas, that the 30-hour week bill may be omitted from the special session's program, Chairman Connery (D.) of Massachusetts, of the House Labor Committee, today announced that hearings would continue on the measure.

After a visit to the White House yesterday Robinson hinted the Black five-day week bill is not in the picture at this moment because of controversies over its provisions.

Connery, in the presence of his committee said:

"Senator Robinson is Democratic leader of the Senate, but not of the House, nor is he chairman of this committee. What he said is his business. This committee, according to its duty, will close hearings Friday and go into executive sessions on the bill."

Asked by Representative Wood (D.) Missouri if he had had any word from the White House, Connery said he had not, and added:

"This is the first time in my 10 years' experience that a senator has seen fit to speak for a committee in another body. It regard it as an acted discourtesy."

These funds, it was reported, were brought to Munich when it seemed Bavaria would not be touched by the Nazi revolution.

WOOLENS SAVE MAN IN 'L' PIT

Byron Griffin, 62, of Verdun st., Dorchester, is alive today because he wore heavy woolen socks in May. Griffin fainted on the platform of Park st. under and fell into the pit, his legs striking the third rail.

As wool is a poor conductor of electricity, Griffin suffered no shock. Subway guards shut off the power, and lifted him from the pit. At Haymarket Relief it was found that Griffin suffered nothing worse than a cut on the head.

Starter Stanley Perry shut off the power and Insp. Harry Green flagged a train that was coasting into the station. Insp. Flood, meanwhile, had jumped into the pit and pulled Griffin off the rail. Service was delayed only 3 minutes.

CROWLEY WAITS FOR FACTS

A police raid for liquor at the Eureka Social and Literary Club, Harvard st., South End, of which she is director, brought charges from Mrs. Casey that police were accepting graft from speakeasy owners in South Boston so that speakeasies are running unmolested there, and that liquor was being sold to boys in girls as young as 14 years of age.

In reply, Supt. Crowley ordered Mrs. Casey to "put up or shut up," as far as her charges were concerned.

Mrs. Casey said she would talk, but to no one but the superintendent, and that if he wanted to hear anything he would have to come and see her. Supt. Crowley refused to go to see her, but said he was available at his office each day.

Meanwhile he has assigned Deputy Supt. Martin King to check up on the statements, and see if there is any fact in them.

Women Clink Mugs of Beer for Sociability, But That's All

New York, May 2 (INS)—Legal beer has failed so far to become a woman's drink.

In spite of the fact that the clink of mugs is heard over dinner tables every night, and scarcely an icebox remains in the land without its quota of the beverage, beer has not really made the grade among the fair sex. It is just a gesture, up to now.

The proof lies in the fact that feminine luncheons, bridge parties, teas and other "chin" parties do not demand beer.

"Their heart isn't in it," said Frank J. Leney, manager of the fashionable hotel Carlyle today. "Women drink to be companionable; many of them order beer when their husbands or brothers do, to be good sports. But when they are with other women, they don't want it.

"We are serving more men at lunch than is used to do, and the beer order is double then. But all-feminine parties still favor tea, coffee and fruit drinks."

Tea continues to hold its own with the feminine clientele at lunch eon and the conventional tea time period, according to E. F. Williamson, resident manager of the Ritz Tower Hotel.

"Beer is ordered by the ladies as a mark of sporting blood rather than beverage preference," he said. "We find that a luncheon table attended only by women is beerless, but when there is a man present the ladies invariably order a little beer to drink along in social equality."

Patrolman Lane's Eye for the Femmes Solved This One

It took the keen eye of Patrolman Raymond J. Lane, clerk at Station 3, to solve what threatened to become a baffling case of identity.

Patrolman Patrick Calinan, on duty on Boston Common to see that the alleged Reds gathered there kept their demonstrations within legal limits, spied a child on the fringe of the crowd who appeared to be lost.

The child, four years old, was clad in overalls, a sweater, and a tight fitting cap.

"Come, sonny," the officers at the station coaxed, "tell us your name." But the child refused to talk.

"Don't you know your name, Sonny?" they kept asking, but the child just pouted.

Patrolman Lane, who had been studying the child while the other officers kept up their questioning, suddenly took the youngster by the hand, and said, "Little girl, what's your name?"

"My name is Dorothy Woll and I live on Bowdoin st," the youngster readily replied.

"You fellows," said Lane, "don't know a girl because she's dressed like Marlene Dietrich. No wonder she wouldn't answer when you called her 'sonny.' She's a lady."

And so she was.

TWO BRIDES SAIL TO PIERCE WILDS OF DIAMOND JUNGLE

They are Mrs. Alice La Varre and Mrs. Ilse La Varre, wives of William and Andre La Varre, who head the La Varre Brazilian Guinea expedition, which left Boston today on the Lady Hawkins of the Canadian National Line bound for Georgetown, British Guinea, where it will start.

From Georgetown the expedition will take a 54-foot canoe, piloted by native paddlers, up the Essequibo river to Barilca, 200 miles. There a portage will be made around the rapids and the expedition will continue to a site already arranged for a base camp in the Roraime mountains.

After three weeks surveying, the expedition will seek the source of three rivers which are known only by their mouths to scientists today. Down one of these rivers the expedition will float to the Amazon, and pick up a river steamer either at Manaos or Obido.

DOG GOES TOO

The country to be traversed is unchartered on maps and is inhabited only by the Carib Indians.

A huge Great Dane dog named "Carib" will accompany the expedition. His special mission will be to keep an eye on Alice and Ilse.

"I am going to take the girls just as far as I think they can stand it," said William LaVarre, head of the expedition, "And I think they can stand it the whole way."

"We have guns and we are not afraid," was the way the brides put it.

"You know they are pretty smart, now, but they will be dressed differently in the jungle," LaVaIle interposed.

LaValle, who is well known in exploring circles and who brought back thousands of dollars worth of diamonds from his last trip, is conducting his expedition with an eye to all scientific requirements.

AFTER DIAMONDS

"We will find diamonds, you can bet on that," he said. "We may also find the source of the South American diamond supply. W ehave orders from the Smithsonian Institute to bring back everything we find."

The eyes of the scientific world are turned on this expedition into the last unexplored district of the world.

JUST LIKE YOU, SCREEN GIRLS HAVE THEIR FAVORITES!

We all have our favorite dishes. Out there in Hollywood, the movie stars are just like us when it comes to "eats." For instance, Helen Twelvetrees craves for fried bananas with raisin sauce. Now what do you think of that? Often for breakfast, dinner and afternoon tea on the same day Joan Crawford will order shredded wholewheat biscuits. Strawberries and cream are the "bestest thing" as far as Karen Morley is concerned. Read the story herewith by Harrison Carroll on what the movie folk thrill over at "eats" time.

Hard Boiled Screen Star Likes His Eggs Cooked Soft

Hollywood, Cal., May 2 (INS)—One of the most difficult jobs the studio folk have is feeding the stars. With actors all strong individualists, the restaurant managers in the studios are faced with tall problems when the stars quit the sets to eat.

from chocolate souffle to ham and eggs. The contract players with dressing rooms on their home lots and time off for it usually have their viands prepared and sent to them.

The others content themselves with a chance at the studio menus, which cover as wide a variety of dishes as found in most famous epicurean eating places.

Among the unusual food requirements in Hollywood are Sari Maritza's chocolate souffle, made with butter, flour, milk, chocolate, eggs and vanilla. Believe it or not, George Raft's special dish is Spanish cake, with maple sugar frosting. Then there is Jimmy Durante's passion for corn flakes. Helen Twelvetrees is another with exotic tastes. She calls for bananas, with raisin sauce, baked black.

The egg eaters include Helen Hayes, an omelet fan; and Wally Beery, with his ham and. Lee Tracy, the hard-boiled expert, has a penchant for soft-boiled eggs. Wynne Gibson likes them planked.

Marie Dressler leads the sea-food contingent. You can see her almost any lunch time at the M-G-M flanked by oysters on the half-shell. Randolph Scott calls on the Paramount commissary for deviled oysters seasoned with nutmeg, cayenne, mustard and Worcestershire sauce. Another star with marine tastes is Maurice Chevalier. His

91 FACING IOWA COURT-MARTIAL

Le Mars, Ia., May 2 (INS)—With a total of 91 farmers held as suspects in the recent mortgage foreclosure violence, the probability of a military trial for the prisoners loomed today.

That a court-martial may be the result of the abduction and assault of District Judge Charles C Bradley was indicated by an order received by Maj.-Gen. Matt D. Tinsley at Denison from Gov. Clyde Herring, who authorized appointment of a military commission to "maintain public safety."

Four officers of the national guard legal department, appointed as members of the military commission, were due here today to assist in preparing evidence for the prosecution of those under arrest.

Aged Mother in Plea for Lifer

Des Moines, Ia., May 2 (AP)—Whatever happens, nothing can shake Mrs. Kate Farnell's love for her son.

When they sent him to the penitentiary at Fort Madison years ago for life for a statutory offense she built a shack outside the prison walls and lived in it so she could be near her boy.

The "boy," Jean, is now 48. Mrs. Farnell is 78, but her advanced age did not stop her from hitch-hiking two days and nights to Des Moines, where she hopes to have Governor Clyde Herring commute Jean's sentence.

DEERY CONDUCT AS BANK HEAD IS HIT HARD

Bristles With Deceits and Irregularities, Master Finds

The administration of John A. Deery as president of the closed Salem Trust Co. "bristles with illegalities and deceits," according to a finding reported to the courts today by Lawrence A. Ford, who served as master in civil action by the bank commissioner.

Deery is now serving a year in the house of correction after pleading guilty to banking irregularities.

Immediately after being sent to jail he was transferred to a county farm, but was returned to the house of correction after a public protest.

Ford found that Deery caused the bank to loan more than $30,000 to "his financially irresponsible brothers and brother-in-law" and to make other loans to a janitor, a carpenter, a clerk and a stenographer, all financially irresponsible and employed by yeomenrens in which Deery was interested.

Ford's duty was to determine the responsibility of the officers and directors for losses suffered by the trust company and to determine ownership of 1128 shares of capital stock of the bank, a controlling interest.

He reports that Deery was the actual owner of the stock, although the shares stood in the names of others. He reports many violations of banking laws on the part of Deery and other officers and directors, but in some instances leaves it to the court to determine actual responsibility. The case will come up in court May 9.

"The company was staggering under foul financial thrusts on Dec. 4, 1931 (the date of closing), and could not take any more punishment, and the respondents knew it," said Ford.

Paid Honeymoon

MACK SENNETT DUCHESS SUES

New York, May 2 (INS)—The former Duchess D'Andria, who, as Lucille Zehring, provided plenty of beauty for Mack Sennett's bathing beauties, was to take the witness stand again today in City court and continue her narrative of how the woman pays.

In this particular instance, the former duchess alleges, $4 a paid for her honeymoon with Duke Paolo Carafa D'Andria and she wants him to hand over $2884 to balance the account.

She told Judge Keller that for the two months she lived with her husband he rarely paid for anything. It was, however, the ignominy of being compelled— she claims—to settle for their love nests at the Hotel Drake in this city and the Ritz in Paris that prompted the current action.

She said that when the duke was courting her he showered her with flowers. She denied she knew he was receiving only $25 a week from his estate when he was keeping company with her, asserting he sent her a corsage every day "which must have cost him $25."

JOBLESS ESCAPE $760 FINES

Lawrence, May 2 (AP)—Four jobless men, arrested for violating the fishing laws found a lenient judge in city court today when they were arraigned on charges which made fines of $760 each possible. After learning they had been out of work for months Judge Frederic N. Chandler put them on probation.

The men had 74 white perch included in their catch of 151 fish taken from Toye's Creek. They had fished with a net which means a $10 fine and each white perch made them liable to the extent of $10.

WOMAN ANNOYS GANDHI AS HE PLANS FAST

Insists She, Too, Will Starve Unless He Gives Up Idea

Poona, India, May 2 (INS)—Wondering a trifle irritably why women refuse to leave him alone, Mahatma Gandhi sat quietly in his Yeravda jail cell today and pondered still another ethical problem.

For hard on the heels of his announcement he will begin a 21-day fast May 8 "directed particularly against myself," despite physicians' warnings it may prove fatal, the white-robed mahatma found his own will pitted against the determination of a woman disciple.

She was Dr. Margaret Spiegel, a German Jewess, who seated herself on the floor of the veranda outside her idol's cell, appealed to him to forego his proposed fast and announced she, too, would starve herself in the event Gandhi should persist.

Dr. Spiegel and Neila Cramm Cook, 24-year-old American girl who went to Greece as a child and later married a Greek poet, visited Gandhi, and it was as a result of this visit that the Jewish girl made her announcement in an effort to save the Mahatma's life.

Gandhi May Win Release by Fast

Simla, India., May 2 (AP)—The Mahatma Gandhi has given the government of India a problem in connection with prison rules that require forcible feeding to prevent death through starvation.

Forcible feeding, it is said, would be an unpleasant course to adopt in the case of Mr. Gandhi, who attaches a spiritual value to fasting.

CADDIES STRIKE HURL ROCKS

A new strike broke out in Peabody today when 125 caddies at the Salem Golf Club, West Peabody, ranging in age from 8 to 18, refused to tote clubs for less than 75 cents a round.

Ten strikebreakers imported from Winchester were driven to the clubhouse when the strikers showered them with a volley of stones. One woman, starting out for a morning round with one of the imported caddies, discharged him when the strikers pleaded with her not to hire a "scab."

Two officers were sent to guard the clubhouse.

Some of the caddies were getting 75 cents a round, but the majority who struck decided to strike until the pay was equalized.

Face on Kraut Can Annoys Him!

Oklahoma City, May 2 (AP)—Having his picture on cans of sauerkraut has caused him "humiliation, annoyance, disgrace and loss of social prestige," asserts Louis D. It was used when his father started in business.

Mexico City, May 2 (AP)—A move to reopen Catholic churches in the State of Vera Cruz was understood today to be under way.

May Showers for May Flowers

"April showers bring May showers," sang Tom Phelan, veteran correspondent and liaison officer between the weatherman and the paper, today.

"You mean May flowers, don't you?" Tom was asked.

"No. I said showers. The weatherman said showers. And after all the rain we had in April, we're going to have some more. Showers are predicted for tonight and tomorrow. Remember, showers, not flowers."

The temperature today is not expected to come within 20 degrees of the record of 91, set for the day in 1930. Yesterday it was 78, equaling the season's high.

5500 TEACHERS GET $1,000,000 NEXT WEEK

Boston's 5500 teachers and other school department employes, whose April pay amounting to $1,000,000 was due last Friday, will not be paid until next Monday.

This announcement, which brought an immediate storm of protest, was made by Arthur Swan, cashier in the city treasurer's office and in charge of the department in the absence of City Treasurer Edmund L. Dolan. Dolan is on his way to Washington with Mayor Curley.

Last week Dolan announced that the payroll could not be completed until this week, due to the fact that the school department had not started its work on the list until after April 21, when the new salary scale was promulgated.

The additional delay is due to the great amount of work still to be done on the tardily received list, according to Swan.

The school committee at its session last night approved the salary cuts, which will save the city $1,370,000, but Chairman Reilly criticized bankers as being responsible for the reductions and the Legislature for taking powers away from the school board.

Dr. Charles Mackey criticized bankers and capitalists "for not bearing their share." The committee asked the board of superintendents to report on the advisability of establishing a single session for the 80,000 elementary school pupils.

DEATH TOLL 80 IN TORNADOES

Tornadoes which swept through four states—Louisiana, Arkansas, Illinois and Missouri—today left a known death toll of 80, hundreds injured and property damage of staggering proportions.

Minden, La., a parish seat, suffered the brunt of the Southern tornadoes, between 50 and 60 persons were killed there as a twister razored the negro quarter of the city. Fire broke out later and militiamen were called to patrol the area.

Five were killed in Illinois when sporadic tornadoes, accompanied by hail and rain, whipped through the central and northern sections, spending their forces over Lake Michigan. Scores were hurt.

In southern Missouri one man was known to have been killed and several injured.

The winds that hit Illinois likewise destroyed many homes, industrial buildings and farm houses. In Fulton county, where the village of Maples Hill was nearly demolished, damage was estimated at $250,000.

Drive on Autoists With Poor Lights

A new system to combat the "one-eyed" motorist will be tried within the next few days as Boston police launch an intensive drive against drivers with defective lights.

The new plan, which was worked out by Deputy Superintendent McDevitt and Commissioner Hultman, will provide every officer on night duty with tickets to be given to the driver with defective lights.

These tickets must be taken to the nearest garage and returned within 24 hours, signed by the mechanic, or court action will be taken.

LONG JOURNEY OVERSEAS AT AN END

Commander of Italian Subs Visits the State House

Commander Valerio Della Campana, in charge of the cruise of two submarines and two patrol boats of the Italian navy, now tied up at Boston Navy Yard, paid a courtesy call with his staff today at Governor Ely's office.

The Governor had not arrived when the visit was made, but the Italians were greeted by his secretary, DeWitt C. DeWolfe, who pinned on the uniform of Commander Campana a Massachusetts State medal.

The vessels arrived at Boston for the third stop of their journey from Gibraltar to Greenland and back again. They left Gibraltar April 1 and stopped at Madeira and Bermuda before their arrival here, ten days from now they will head for Halifax, Labrador and finally Greenland. At Greenland they will deliver supplies for the Italian planes flying over here for the Century of Progress Exposition at Chicago.

On the return voyage from Greenland the vessels will stop at Ireland and England before reaching Gibraltar.

The submarines are the Balilla, serving as the mother ship of the voyage, and the D. Millelire. The patrol boats are the Regia Nave (Royal Ship) Biglieri and the Regia Nave Matteucci.

When the vessels arrived here yesterday greetings were extended by representatives of the navy, army, national guard and the Italian consulate. Hundreds of Bostonians, many of Italian origin, gathered on the piers to see the vessels dock and greet the arrivals.

There was a bustle of activity at the pier all afternoon. Last night the crews of the four vessels, totalling 212 men, came ashore for their first visit to Boston.

Beginning Thursday, the vessels will be open to inspection of the public daily from 2 to 5:30 p. m. Commdr. Campana and Italian Consul-General Ermanno Amao paid courtesy calls on Admiral Nulton and at the State House and City Hall.

Mrs. Ropes Against Beer at Harvard

Drunkenness among students has "practically disappeared," according to Mrs. A. D. Ropes, chairman of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., who went on record today as strongly disapproving the plan to serve 3.2 beer in the Harvard dining halls.

"Introduction of beer is obviously unconstitutional, in view of the continued—and, we hope, permanent—existence of the Eighteenth Amendment," she said.

19 Moslem Priests Escape Hanging

Istanbul, Turkey, May 2 (AP)—The sentence of hanging which was generally expected to have been passed upon 19 Bruza clergymen and Muezzins who revolted against the government's program of nationalizing Moslem prayers, has dwindled to a penalty of one or two years in prison.

The decision of the courts appears to indicate the Turkish government is becoming more lenient toward the Moslems.

GIRL'S SLAYER STILL IN TOWN, IS THE BELIEF

By JAMES J. SMITH
Boston Evening American Staff Correspondent

North Adams, May 2—Police Chief Michael J. Conlon told the Boston Evening American today he is convinced that the slayer of 18-year-old Leah Lloyd Johnson is still in this city, going about his daily work and unsuspected even by his closest associates.

This announcement followed discovery of the dead girl's powder puff, rouge stick, handbag and other belongings scattered along a cross-country trail from the spot where her body was found Saturday.

The articles were so situated as to indicate quite plainly that they had been "planted" by somebody wishing to give an appearance of flight away from North Adams, and on foot.

BAG ESCAPES RAIN

Although it rained between the time of the murder and the finding of these articles, they showed no signs of weather.

As a result of his decision, Chief Conlon called in a score or more of men and youths for questioning, making a total of more than 50 persons thus far grilled in the investigation.

While parts of the body were undergoing miscroscopic examination at a local hospital the corpse was buried in Hillside cemetery, in the presence of a few relatives, including the girl's 85-year-old grandfather, from whose home the funeral took place.

TRIP TO CANADA

Lawrence Burdick, 20, cousin of Miss Johnston, who has supplied the police with one clue after another, seemed to lean most heavily today on one which relates to an unidentified stranger who proposed a trip to Canada to the girl.

"Leah came to my house last Thursday night while I was in bed and told my wife that she had been drinking beer with a man from Kansas City who was making a sales trip and was going to Canada," said Burdick.

"She said he wanted her to go with him, but my wife cautioned her against it. She left soon after, saying, 'Well, I mustn't keep the boy friend waiting.' She was with him in an auto but I didn't look out to see either him or the car."

The powder puff, wrist watch and other articles of the murdered nursemaid were found by Norman Granger, 25, who took the investigators by surprise by remarking that he was "somewhat of an amateur detective."

Chief Conlon was in conference early today with State Detective Elka P. Smith and Asst. Dist. Atty. Harold Gaffney.

He said he plans also to question a North Adams man who used the diamond ring of Miss Johnson some time ago as security for insurance required in his business.

Another of the early morning activities today was the questioning of a Springfield milkman, Royal F. Cady, 25, who once served as a corps of magazine solicitors in the North Adams section.

FUNERAL IS ARRANGED

Cady, who was first suspected as a salesman-sweetheart of the Johnston girl, was freed of suspicion when records of his milk company revealed that he worked every night last week, including the night he usually had off.

The search for magazine salesmen was instigated by a belated report of Lawrence Burdick, who reported after he learned that Albert Reynolds, his brother-in-law, had been held for questioning at Manchester, Vt.

Reynolds, who admitted authorship of love letters signed "Al" said he was once chummy with the girl but hadn't seen her since Easter.

WHY B. U.'S PROM IS SURE TO BE A SUCCESS

ROSEMARY T. LOESER

ESTHER MULRENIN

The queen of Boston University prom will be Rosemary Loeser, of Brookline. She won the honor by nosing out Esther Mulrenin, of Mattapan, as the very last votes were counted in the election sponsored by the News, student paper. Lois Moran, who has hobnobbed with presidents so long in "Of Thee I Sing," will crown the queen. Her experience puts her at ease in the presence of dignitaries, it is felt. After looking at these pictures, do you think it will be hard to sell prom tickets? (Boston American Photo.)

Foreign Affairs Offer Enough Puzzles

It may not be fair to apply a compress of cold figures to such a raging fever as racial hatred, but the figures in the German case are illuminating. As the news comes from Berlin, growing more and more grotesque, we learn that Jews must not box or play chess (publicly, I suppose) or be doctors except in the proportion of population; the whole attack seems to be an effort to get jobs for loyal Nazis, a sort of patronage-game, much as we play it when a new political party comes into power; but going further. Democrats, after twelve lean years, still allow Republicans to gain a livelihood, although the Republicans have made it a bit difficult for anyone to gain anything. Yet the aim of small politicians is always jobs for the deserving, and the Nazi system recognizes the fact that ordinary business life is as full of conflict and the cut-throat habits of the jungle as politics ever was. If we have to look for an economic motive (and Maxians will rap us over the knuckles if we do not) the anti-Semitism of Germany can be interpreted merely as a cloak for the simple process of taking jobs away from your enemies and giving them to your friends. This is where the statistics enter the arguments for the total number of jobs held by Jews cannot be more than a quarter of a million and is probably much smaller.

GILBERT SELDES

Lack Motive

Germany is a country much like our own industrially and in our country less than half the population works. Children, imbeciles, and the very old are linked with the very wealthy as non-workers, and housewives, earning no regular pay, are added to the number. There are about half a million Jews in Germany, and if we subtract the non-workers, we come to a maximum of 200,000 jobs. The question for Hitler, then, is whether it has been worth while to sacrifice his position in world affairs for the moderate gain of giving his fellowers a few jobs.

* * *

Some of them were rather "positions" than jobs—positions of authority and influence, in the theater, in the world of education, in journalism, and notably in finance. Nothing seems to me more reasonable than Hitler's determination that his regime should not be jeopardized by people who do not share his policies—and great bankers, great newspaper owners, and influential teachers could undermine his strength. The puzzle is that the economic motive in Hitlerism is too clear in several ways and too obscure in great ones. Taking jobs away from Jews cannot be worth the price Hitler has paid—a price which seems to include American hostility to Germany and American friendship for England and France.

* * *

In Venice

The reputation of Mussolini, growing for many years, has taken a natural spurt upward as Fascism is being compared with Hitlerism, so that all criticism of Il Duce becomes ungracious. Yet sentimental Americans will, I think, regret one of his triumphs: he has attached Venice to the mainland of Italy by a causeway, a motor highway to the city of gondolas. This is progress, but it is a little hateful and it is belated. In 50 years a sea-airport in Venice would have taken care of all necessary traffic and been in keeping with the solitary city.

* * *

People have always been complaining about progress touching Venice. John Ruskin was appalled at the steamboat which, 30 years later, seemed ugly, but not unnatural; by that time motor speed boats were the enemy of the picturesque and the traditional in Venice. Now motor cars can come to the very edge of the city; they cannot enter because the streets have so many bridges and steps. Yet in another hundred years some way may be found to level off the streets, and the Bridge of Sighs or the Rialto bridge may be merely memories or runways to garages.

* * *

Revised

Still on foreign affairs, I confess to complete bewilderment at the sight of headlines announcing that England is lending 30 million pounds to France. The arrangements are complicated, even financial experts admit; but what is simple is that the headline ought to be reversed and France ought to be lending money to England. France has gold and stays on gold; England is impoverished. Yet France faces a deficit in the budget and turns to poor old England for help.

* * *

Negotiations like this are useful because they emphasize a special point—that apart from industry, apart from commerce and tariffs and unemployment and all the other worries of the world—a specific financial problem exists. Money becomes a thing in itself, and a loan, like this one is used for the purpose of balancing a budget, on one side and keeping up the value of the pound on the other, the whole transaction being a matter of financial juggling, making us aware of the fact that no matter how we set our house in order, we have to do something about the special matter of gold before we can be safe from attack.

* * *

Two years ago Vincent d'Abernon, one of the wisest of England's financiers, said that our depression was the most gratuitous in history and that definite steps to recovery could be made in a few weeks if the principal gold-using countries got together and did the right thing. At that time we were not aware of the power of gold; we acted as if finance corresponded only to facts. We are sufficiently aware now of the truth, that the financial problem is woven into all the others and, in addition, has complexities of its own. At any rate, we have learned that much.

Choral Union Gives "Elijah" Revival

By MOSES SMITH

The People's Choral Union, led by Francis Findlay and assisted by various performers, gave its "Spring Concert" in Jordan Hall last night, the program consisting of Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

It has been some time since "Elijah" has been presented in Boston—how long, one does not recall off-hand.

The quartet of soloists contained Alice Armstrong, Kimball, soprano; Marie Murray, contralto; Ruion Robison, tenor, and Harry D. Newcombe, basso. They performed capably, the women pleasing the more by their vocal quality. The chorus, an amateur organization, had been well drilled by Mr. Findlay, and sang with more than a command of mere notes.

Mr. Findlay led these forces, as well as a competent orchestra, in a performance that tended to routine, though now and again there was some excitement. If his tempi seemed too rigid, one should remember that it was a considerable accomplishment for the chorus to master "Elijah."

Rowland Halfpenny played the organ and Reginald Boardman the piano. An audience of fair size applauded cordially.

BOOKS---And a Number of Things

By Charles Hanson Towne

FULFILMENT

This was my dream in May—to have one bloom,
Fragrant with apple-scent and springtide rain
Live through the bleakness of the autumn gloom,
Awakening all beauty in my room,
Hiding the dismal hills, quenching dull pain.

This was my dream in youth—to have you near
When the dark hours of age have crept on me;
To have you sit my side when twilight drear
Told that the light of day would disappear;
To have you love me, O unswervingly!

These dreams were mine! . . .
Dear heart, the night is nigh,
No single flower blooms thro' November chill,
And you are vanished, lost—oh, who knows why?
But hush! Far, far within the vaulted sky,

* * *

I like all summer resorts better out of season. Before the crowds have come, or after they have gone, seems a much more intelligent time to visit the seashore, for instance.

So, on a certain soft April morning I took the subway and went to Coney Island. It cost but a nickel to flash underground and over bridges, and finally reach the ocean; and it took exactly fifty-five minutes from the heart of Manhattan. Half the ride, once Brooklyn is achieved, is taken by daylight, and as I happen to be no lover of tunnels, this was a delightful surprise. And when one sees the marvel of Manhattan's underground system—a vast city beneath our city—one gets a thrill, riding in darkness under these streets with whose very names one is unfamiliar.

* * *

They had a fire at Coney Island last summer; but there are few evidences of it now. The ashes are gone, and in their place have already risen new garish buildings, and the world of pleasure will soon resume its tinsel existence. There is a human need of Coney Island, with its false fronts, is foolishness and frivolity. The drabbest people expand into grown-up children when its season opens.

Only one carousel was in working order the day I was there; but it was a prelude to what would inevitably follow. A few children and one buxom woman were striving for the brass ring while the band played, curiously enough, "Nearer My God to Thee." My Presbyterian complex became strangely blended with the gay wooden lions and tigers and horses of my childhood.

But the sea was there in all its blue glory, and the new boardwalk was uncrowded. It was a beautiful day, snuggled in between many of rain, and people were taking sun baths on phantom decks of ships, a few were in luxurious wheelchairs, and the sands were being scrubbed by little machines that looked like the tanks the British used in the war; the popcorn stands were in full bloom, and the peanut vendors were doing a desultory business. Signs of beer were exhibited everywhere, but the barkers, always my joy, had not yet come out, though hot dogs were in evidence even if the scenic railways and the mammoth wheels had not begun to move.

There is a fine hotel on the boardwalk, called the Half Moon. It is open all the year round, solid and substantial, in striking contrast to its ephemeral surroundings. I took lunch there, overlooking the ocean, wrapped in sunshine, and afterwards sat on the sun deck, watching the water, drinking in the Springtime peace of it.

What a place to come, I thought, if one were writing a book! For here one could find solitude for one's work, and afterwards romp and play and grow young again on the shore, or along the stretches of the boardwalk, always filled with excitement and novelty.

Why go to distant Atlantic City when this is on the fringes of New York? The air is like wine—and not light wine, at that. An intoxicating place. But if one wishes something less full of sound and fury in the Summer season, there is Brighton Beach only a stone's throw away with no hint of the aspect of a European seaside resort, with its wide esplanade that listens all day and night to the singing of the sea.

TRY THIS DELICIOUS STRAWBERRY PIE

STRAWBERRY PIE

Make plain pie paste sufficient for upper and lower crust, combining 1½ cups flour, ½ tsp. salt and ½ cup shortening. Blend with just enough cold water to hold together. Divide in two equal parts.

Roll half the dough on floured board. Line medium sized pie tin. Sprinkle 1 tbsp. flour and 1 tbsp. sugar which have been mixed together over lower crust. This prevents juices from soaking crust.

Wash and hull one quart strawberries. Mix ¾ to 1 cup sugar, depending on sourness of berries, with 3 tbsps. flour (or 2 tbsps. cornstarch or 1½ tsps. arrow root). Mix with berries and put in pie shell.

Moisten edge of lower crust with water. Roll top crust, making incisions, place over pie and press lower and upper crust firmly together. Bake 10 minutes at 450 deg., then about 30 minutes at 350.

Frosting That Never Fails

Most of us agree that a Seven-Minute or White Mountain Frosting is the ideal one for our best Sunday go-to-meeting cake, but all-too-often these are not entirely successful—either they are cooked a bit too long and turn sugary, or are too soft and gooey.

Here's one we made in the Martha Lee Cooking School this week that is just failure proof. We made it on two rainy days, which is the final acid test. It is the corn syrup that's the secret of its creamy perfection—it crusts over just a little on top and stays soft and creamy underneath:

SEVEN MINUTE FROSTING

2 egg whites, unbeaten
1½ cups sugar
5 tbsps. water
1 tsp. vanilla
1½ tsps. light corn syrup

Put egg whites, sugar, water and corn syrup in upper part of double boiler. Beat with rotary egg beater until thoroughly mixed. Place over rapidly boiling water, beat constantly with rotary egg beater and cook 7 minutes, or until frosting will stand in peaks. Remove from fire, add vanilla and beat until thick enough to spread. Makes enough frosting to cover tops and sides of two 9-inch layers.

This frosting may be tinted in delicate shades by adding a bit of coloring and mixing well before spreading on cake.

POT ROAST WITH POTATO PANCAKES

4 lbs. brisket or any desired cut of beef
1 bunch carrots
Pepper, salt, garlic (may be omitted)
2 onions, sliced.

Heat a little beef drippings in pan and when very hot sear beef until brown, turning as often as necessary. Sprinkle with seasonings, add sliced onions, and when very brown cover tightly and turn out light for about ten minutes. This is done to see how much water there is in the meat as some cuts have more than others. Never have very much water in the pan (about 1 inch). Turn light on very low and add water to the above amount if none has come out of the meat. Cook until tender (about 3 or 4 hours) adding a very little water as it boils down. By adding only a little water the meat is kept more juicy than when covered with water. Carrots may be added at any time after 1 hour's cooking—sliced or whole.

POTATO PANCAKES

6 medium potatoes grated—pepper—salt.
1 beaten egg
2 tbls. flour or cracker crumbs.

Drain grated potatoes and save liquid. When this liquid has settled take the starch from the bottom of the dish and add to mixture. Add beaten egg and seasonings. Fry in mazola, crisco or beef fat. These are delicious served with Pot Roast. Care must be taken not to prepare these until time to cook as the potatoes turn dark very quickly when exposed.

RHUBARB PIE DE LUXE

2 cups cut rhubarb
1 tbsp. butter
1¼ cups sugar
2 eggs
1 tbsp. flour
Baked pastry shell
6 tbsps. sugar for meringue
½ tsp vanilla

Wash rhubarb and dry carefully. Cut into ½ inch pieces without peeling. Melt the butter in a saucepan, adding 1 cup sugar and rhubarb to it. Cook until the rhubarb is softened and sugar melted, stirring carefully. At this stage add egg yolk slightly beaten with the rest of the sugar mixed with the flour. Stir gradually into the hot mixture and cook for a few minutes until it is of jelly-like consistency. Remove from fire and cool. Pour into the baked and cooled pastry shell and top with meringue made of the egg whites beaten with the sugar and vanilla. Brown in a slow oven—300 degrees F.

CLUB SANDWICHES FOR INFORMAL EVENING SUPPERS

A simple way of serving a Club sandwich is to let each guest make his own. Arrange the separated and cleaned leaves of lettuce in a head in the center of a large serving platter. Lay a border of thin tomato slices around the lettuce, then a circle of white onion slices and border this with bacon crisped on a broiler and thinly sliced cold chicken. A generous bowl of mayonnaise should accompany the platter. Each person then adjusts the platter to suit his own taste and serves with the gourmet coffee while each guest selects his own sandwich filling and arranges his repast.

1½ cups crumbled soda crackers
3 tbsps. butter
3 hard boiled eggs

1 tsp. salt

Roll crackers with a rolling pin. Add the butter and brown in a frying pan, slice the eggs. Mix crackers, eggs, olives, cheese, onion, mustard and salt. Pour into a greased baking dish and cover with the milk. Dot with butter and bake in an oven 425 degrees.

MODERN CONVENIENCES AND PEASANT DECORATIONS IN BRIDE'S MODEL KITCHEN

Quit Boy, Help Mother, Says Miss Fairfax

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 21 years old. I am working every day, and get $30 a week. It seems "swelegant" to me these days. In our firm is a very lively girl. She's 23, but she doesn't admit it. We became engaged, and she bosses me. I send $10 a week home to the folks, because father has been laid off and they need it. The girl said I had to stop that, as we ought to put the money away to buy a home, but I couldn't go back on Mother and Dad. Mother's brother is one of the bosses and he told me I was a fool to keep on with her; that she is old enough to be my mother, and he'd fire both of us if we didn't quit being engaged.

MISERABLE.

Dear Miserable. Better take your uncle's advice. Twenty-one and twenty-eight, in this case, is not only a difference of years, but one of experience. On your present salary, you're quite right to help out Mother and Dad. Just tell that lady you feel you're too young to continue the engagement.

Present for Boy

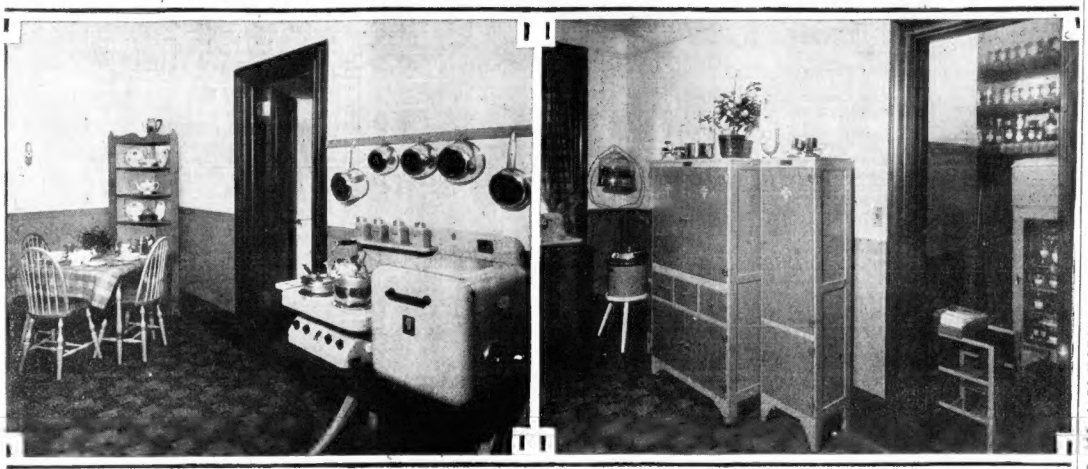
DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been going "steady" with a boy for about ten months. His birthday is coming soon, and I would like to know what your idea of a nice present for a boy who doesn't smoke.

HIS GIRL.

Dear Girl: Leather things are always reliable presents to give the boy friend: A photograph case, a brief case, a collar box. Books are acceptable for a boy who is fond of reading.

TILE, GREEN AND CREAMY WHITE WITH PLENTY OF COPPER PANS



When the young bride steps into her kitchen, our wish for her is that it will be as delightful and efficient as this one. The color scheme is decidedly practical—tile, soft deep green, and cream—and it's carried out completely in the linoleum, the walls, the curtains, furnishings, and all. There is an electric range, refrigerator, and a little electric sink that is detachable, plus any number of useful electric gadgets. A row of shining copper pans line the wall just as French peasants love to have them, and there is a copper coffeepot, teapot and casserole as well. The peasant idea is carried still farther in the gaily checked curtains and table cover in the same three colors—tile, green and cream—and just for color contrast, there is a little fruited orange tree and orange candles on the cabinet.

Reason Women Cannot Fight in the Wars

By MARGUERITE MOOERS MARSHALL

TO BRING her baby into the world every mother battles with Death and his two dark angels of Pain and Fear. To bring her baby to manhood or womanhood every mother fights Death again, not once but many times—the Death by accident or disease always lying in wait for little children. All mothers are soldiers—but enlisted in the defense troops of Life. That is why they can never be enrolled in armies of offense, whose business is to destroy life instead of giving it.

And that is "the everlasting nay" to Amelia Earhart's suggestion in Washington, the other day, that such women's organizations as the D. A. R. should be willing to bear arms themselves, since they advocate a strong national defense.

The simple truth is that women are too valuable to any country to fight for it. As Bernard Shaw has pointed out, a nation can lose ninety out of every hundred of its young men on the battlefield and still continue to exist, but, if it should lose the same proportion of young women—potential mothers—that nation would be doomed.

Miss Earhart believes, too, other ear-splitting idealists that women might really wage the "war to end war."

"If women were drafted I think it would be an effective means of ending war. We glorify war now, using all sorts of propaganda to make it more colorful. If women went to war, had actual combat, it might shock civilization into a realization of the waste and tragedy.

Don't Pick It Up!

IF YOU drop your fork, or knife, or spoon, or napkin, when dining in a restaurant, leave it where it falls. Don't even try to pick it up. The waiter will bring you a fresh one to replace it.

At a Dance

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

I have invited a very fine young man to our junior prom, which is to take place in a few weeks. I have bought the tickets, but I am uncertain as to who is to pay for the checking of the wraps?

PATSY.

Dear Patsy: When you arrive at the entrance of the place, you go to the ladies' dressing-room and check your wraps, and the young man goes to the men's dressing-room. After the dance, you each go for your own wraps, and each gives the attendant the fee.

PATTERN 9602

Save the Money or Buy a Coat---Which Would You Advise?

"School of Clothes"

By Margaret Matson

"DEAR MARGARET MATSON:

"Will you please become an arbitress between my conscience and myself? (I have not confused you with Miss Fairfax, so be relieved.)

"I do not place my thoughts on paper very coherently, so be patient, please. If you were a young lady, 28, unmarried, no boy friend—not even a prospect, no swanky friends, but devoted to an old-fashioned mother who is a 'saver'—I'm getting ahead of myself.

"I have been out of work two years and have some money still left in the bank. I would just love to own a new spring coat, bought one last year, but it has faded very badly. I feel that I can't wear it this year, not even dyed. Is it extravagant to get a nice Harris tweed swagger coat?

play tennis—on the public courts; swim—in the municipal swimming pool; dance—at public dance halls and summer resorts so while I 'go places' I'm not socially swanky.

"The family attitude is this: Wilful waste makes woeful want. When I'm old I'll be on a welfare list somewhere if I want everything I see. It will soon be warm and I won't need a coat in the daytime and at night its dark and who will notice, etc.

My attitude: Who knows whether I will live to be old and if I do, new clothes will have lost their big thrill. If I look very nice I might connect with a job or a nice boy friend, and yet, and yet—Systematic Saving is the Secret of Success—or is it? It isn't as if I had no coat at all to wear.

What's your attitude, Miss Matson—Get the coat or keep the money and probably still have it next spring when everybody's coat is worn out?"

(Signed) E. G.

"E. G.," since you ask my opinion, it is this: That your problem isn't choosing between saving and spending, but of deciding how much to do of each. The very fact that you still have the money to buy the new coat, after being unemployed for two years, proves that saving has its advantages. Many girls in similar circumstances have been hungry for some time. However, it is very difficult to meet prospective employers in shabby clothes. Every girl knows that. What I should suggest is that you get yourself one very good-looking outfit. Perhaps you can renovate something you have plus the purchase of some effective new accessories. If you need the coat to complete this outfit, get it. If not, then wait. In this way you can give yourself the advantage of a faultless appearance in interviewing men for a job—which is what you want, do you not? Then AFTER you get the job you can think about revamping your entire wardrobe. Isn't that logical? There is no telling how long you will be out of work, nor how much of your present savings you may spend on clothes.

I, personally, do not look upon clothes as "wilful waste" unless one buys more than she needs. And she needs sufficient to keep her from feeling at a disadvantage. And, too, I think we are very likely to confuse "systematic saving" with the tucking away of every available dollar, no matter what it costs us to do so. Budget-makers tell us that the sane and healthful management of money is to divide the income into various portions and spend it accordingly. On December 29, 1932, we published the budget which was accepted by the Mass. Federation of Women's Clubs as being the best of many submitted to them for their approval. It divides the income thus: 23 per cent for food; 20 per cent for shelter; 20 per cent for operating expenses such as gas, electricity et cetera; 14 per cent for clothes; 11 per cent for advancement—education, recreation and the like—and 12 per cent for savings. I should suggest that as soon as your income begins again you sit down and make some such plan for yourself. Then your conscience will be more friendly. You see I have a little slogan, E. G.; it's this: when you can't decide between two things, take a little of both.

How Best to Beautify Gray Hair

By HELEN FOLLETT

GRAY HAIR needs fastidious care. If soap imparts a yellow cast, use white of eggs. Six or seven are necessary even if the hair is short. Beat slightly, add a tablespoon of cold water. Rinse the hair, friction in part of the eggs, rinse, repeat the egg application with a final rousing old rinsing with a bath spray. Add a drop of bluing to a bowl of water, dip in the head—the final rite for the silvered ladies.

Aid Your Lungs

IF BLOOD streams are to purr, cheeks flush brown roses, the lungs must have deep drafts of fresh air that wash out the lower lobes. Shallow breathers are likely to have gray skins, dull eyes, lagging steps. Before going to sleep and upon awakening give the lungs a fine rousing old air bath, inhaling through the nostrils, expanding the chest cavity, exhaling through the lips. A long walk every day should be on the calendar of Pretty One's activities. Walking is the ideal exercise: it warms the flesh, stimulates the avenues of elimination, does wonders for the the complexion that has gone stale.

Arch of the Foot

THE IDEAL FOOT has a medium arch. That's the kind that puts up the most graceful appearances, gives best service when there's the date for the long walk, the game of tennis or golf. The lazy woman who hates exercise, never walks a block if she can leap into the gasoline chariot, is the one who develops high arches. To keep feet healthy and happy the heel of the shoe should not lift them more than one inch and a quarter. Of course, the evening indulgence in higher heels is permitted. Cinderellas like stilts.

Simple, Hygienic Living Assures Healthy Life

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

RECENTLY I attended a dinner given in the honor of a physician who had devoted fifty years of his life to the practice and teaching of medicine. For twenty-five years he practiced medicine in the City of New York. During the remaining quarter of a century he taught at one of the leading medical schools of the country. Many of his colleagues and former students attended the dinner.

Dr. Copeland

This learned man said that though the average expectation of life had doubled since he became a doctor, too many persons still overlook simple rules of hygiene so essential to good health. He stressed the importance of preventive medicine and recalled that in his youth little, if any, attention was given to the prevention of disease.

Headaches, nausea, "biliousness," lack of appetite, burning pain after meals, nervousness, loss of weight and insomnia are a few signs that should never be neglected. Every day we read in the newspapers of the sudden death of a notable. He may have had persistent heartburn which the sufferer neglected and attributed to faulty eating. In reality, the victim had heart disease, but never found time to visit a doctor who could have helped him.

The authorities all agree that the prevention as well as the cure of disease, lies in simple hygienic living. Bear in mind that plenty of fresh air, sunlight, moderate exercise, abundant rest and sleep, daily elimination, simple and nourishing foods, are the foundation of a healthy life.

Listen, World!

By ELSIE ROBINSON

Would You Kill Him?

"I BELIEVE in capital punishment," you say.

Very well, that's your privilege. But just how much do you believe in it—and just how much do you know about this thing in which you believe?

Do you sincerely and intelligently believe that you have, by your vote, the right to kill your fellow man—and would you back up that belief by actually cutting the rope or pulling the lever which sends him to his doom?

Elsie Robinson

Or is this just some more of your loose, lazy thinking; and would you really pass out cold if the hang-man called your bluff and put the noose in your hand?

All of which I'm asking, because I'm mad. As I write this, Winnie Smith Judd's ghastly trial is still going on; and I've been hearing a lot of slack-jawed talk on the subject of capital punishment. Particularly from Nice Ladies, who never even saw a pig sticking—much less a hanging—yet who think they're talking awful smart and brave when they say they'd send that poor, wretched soul to her death.

Now I do happen to know a little about capital punishment. Because I am a woman, I have never been permitted to see an execution; but I have seen plenty of hard-boiled newspaper men come gagging back from "covering the story", and I have taken pains to learn each hideous detail of the whole foul business which you and I, by our votes, are countenancing.

So I know what I'm talking about when I say that I don't believe in capital punishment.

I'm against it with every atom of decency that there is in me. I consider it the beastliest blot on our so-called civilization. For it not only makes murderers of us but it does something worse—something slimier. It makes cheats and cowards of us all.

For here we are, claiming we want capital punishment—

And voting to have capital punishment—

And hiring men to perform capital punishment—

And yet there isn't one out of a thousand of us who would have the nerve to do the thing we hire those men to do!

You doubt it, lady? All right—answer me this. You have equality now, and a vote. You're supposed to think as straight as a man, and take it as hard on the chin. Very well—let's see what your pose is worth.

Every time a man in your state dies by capital punishment, you help kill him. You kill him as truly as though you drove a knife through his flesh or sent a bullet crashing through his brain. And whether you realize it or not, his dribbling blood and his drying drool clot on your polished nails.

All of which is perfectly jake if you know what you're doing, and you mean what you're saying when you stamp your ballot. But do you?

Would you yourself cut the rope that sends the body jerking, twisting to its death dance on the empty air?

Or, if roasting is more to your taste, would you yourself, kind lady, strap an 18-year-old boy to a chair—a skinny half grown youngster, still green as your own little lad at home—and having strapped him, cruel thong on white young ankle and thin young wrist, would you split his trouser and clamp the death steel tight?

And then would you pull the lever that let the roasting begin—the roasting for which you voted at the polls?

Would you do that, really? Would you back your vote with the actual act; do the thing you have sent men to do? Then, if you would, you're an honest woman and I respect your opinion.

But if you wouldn't, you're a vicious hypocrite, a white-livered coward, an infernal liar—and as wicked a menace to civilization as the man you sent to death.

Thrilling Romance of Hollywood Today

By Robert Terry Shannon

CHAPTER ONE

The radio announcer stood beside his microphone with a fox-smile on his face and a sleek dinner coat on his back. Great drum-shaped searchlights poured floods of glaring illumination into the forecourt of the theater giving everyone a look of waxen artificiality.

Here in the balmy open air, amid Babylonian columns with the starry sky overhead and marble mosaics underfoot, mingled the most beautiful women and the best-fed men on earth. The rabble—too far back to smell the expensive perfumes—was held in check by ropes and policemen who wore white gloves for the unusual occasion.

Whenever a polished motor car brought up another star, or even an established feature player, the multitudes on the sidewalk cheered and clapped hands. The announcer's excited voice began to fall over itself.

"Just a minute, folks! Here comes Sybil Hall, the screen star! She's wearing a—ha! ha!—good evening, Miss Hall. Miss Hall—Miss Hall—ha! ha!—would you say a few words in the microphone, please, to the folks out there on the air . . .

Miss Hall consented in a voice warm and living. A silvery evening dress glistened on her body. The announcer's eyes worshipped her loveliness for a moment before he turned to worship the next glittering arrival.

Before the evening was over the whole galaxy of Hollywood passed before the microphone and said approximately the same thing. All confessed themselves to be in a high state of excited anticipation and professed the keenest affection for the absent Leni Luneska.

The announcer who was not going to see the picture at all, declared repeatedly that motion picture history was being made tonight and his words grew increasingly electrical.

WIFE LISTENED IN

At home, his wife listened in a shuddering fear that his tongue would slip and he would say what he really thought about the whole affair. It had never happened but Mrs. Announcer lived in terror until all was safely over.

A dowdy gentleman arrived and spoke a few words into the ether. He was the mayor of the city.

A domestic-looking man in a gray suit—Tom Mulrooney, chief of detectives—was ignored by the announcer and passed inconspicuously into the theater.

The announcer craned his neck hopefully toward the curb as a tall young man wearing a negligent top coat over his dinner jacket approached. Several women turned their heads to look at him.

This was Lucky Cavanaugh—gambler—with his athlete's body and step elastic as a cat's. His skin was clear and tanned over high cheekbones, a bold Roman nose, and a solid chin. The eyes were gray, steady, unconsciously arrogant.

No one mistook him for an actor. The bony structure of his countenance belonged to a generation antedating Hollywood; to the period of frontier and plain and sunbaked cattle towns. This heritage was in his face yet his voice vibrated musically and his manners bore the unmistakable stamp of a cultured superiority.

"LUCKY" ARRIVES

"And here comes Lucky Cavanaugh!" cried the announcer into his contraption. "There's a rumor around he broke the bank at Caliente last week. Maybe he'll give us his system."

The young man smiled faintly and addressed the microphone.

"Don't you believe a word of it, citizens," he said easily. "There's only one way to beat roulette—and that is to own the wheel. I didn't."

There was a burst of cheering from the street and Leni Luneska arrived triumphantly on the arm of a middle-aged gentleman in a silk hat.

She was small and slim in an evening wrap of platinum material wrapped tightly across her figure. The searchlights gave her a metallic sheen, around her blonde head there was; almost, an aura.

Her voice when she spoke for the radio audience was slightly agitated and had the quality of golden wine with bubbles rising. The scarcely perceptible accent carried the flavor of Europe.

"This night," she said, "is the climax of all that I have ever dreamed for and hoped for and worked for. If I am happy. I am also a little frightened. Give me, please, your good thoughts . . ."

Lucky Cavanaugh took off his dark felt hat and stood quite near, watching her. As she left the microphone it was necessary for him to stand aside.

PASSED NEAR

She passed so near that he sensed magnetic radiations from her body. Her face had the fresh young vitality of a flower, but the violet-colored eyes were slightly shadowed as from fatigue.

Lucky Cavanaugh's admiration suddenly was complicated by a twinge of pity. He had caught, with his gambler's sixth sense, the bewilderment, the lonely and troubled uncertainty of the lovely Leni Luneska as she stood balanced precariously on the very pinnacle of fame.

This knowledge was purely intuitive with him. He was, by profession, a gambler and endowed with some strange quality of human understanding akin to telepathy. Frequently this sense deceived him, but more often it was amazingly accurate.

Up until this moment the matter had been only idle speculation with him when a man's guttural voice broke out from the crowd held back by the cordon of ropes and policemen.

"Leni Leni! It is I—Karl! Karl Kruger!"

The voice, apparently, struck the girl like a bullet. She stopped and even before she turned her head, the color began to recede from her face.

Before the nearest policeman could stop him, he had stooped and dashed under the rope like an animal. With rapid steps he crossed the forecourt and was beside her. Lucky Cavanaugh, no more than five feet from Leni Luneska, saw and heard. The man was a foreigner, shabby, emaciated. His eyes protruded and burned with excitement. The lips were thin and slightly twisted.

"Leni! Leni! It is I—Karl! Karl Kruger!" The voice apparently struck the gir like a bullet. She stopped and turned.

"I am starving, Leni!" he rattled in his throat. "Do you want me to tell everybody—the whole world—to shout it from the housetops—" He began to fling his hand and change color as policemen came running up. "Tell them I'm all right, Leni!"

Leni Luneska's face became smooth as white marble. As the police seized the man, she spoke in strained, muffled words.

"Leave him alone, please . . . I will speak with him . . . old acquaintance . . . later—on the inside . . ."

Her escort's face was blank with lack of understanding, but Karl Kruger's step was jaunty as he walked behind the girl. There was no trouble at the door. Luneska's word was sufficient. Directly after Kruger sauntered. Lucky Cavanaugh, utterly at ease.

"SHARLIE"

By Beatrice Burton

Concluded From Yesterday

IT WAS 10 O'CLOCK that night when Edna came home. The family were in the living room when she unlocked the door of the apartment and came in a new Edna, with her eyes so deep and sparkling that they looked black in the lights of the room, a bunch of white gardenias wilting on the front of her coat and her face looking younger than Sharlie's face.

Edna laid her coat on the bed and unpinned the flowers.

"I've been out having dinner with Mr. Collins," she said, "and he told me all about you, Sharlie. From beginning to end. He said that he felt sure you were dazzled by his position and his money and his car—and by his man-of-the-world air, and he tried to explain to me how you had dazzled him with your youth.

"Dodie isn't speak—g to me, just now, but I ought to go in and thank her for what she did for me today. She told Mr. Collins that I'd been in love with him for years, and that I was jealous of you, and trying to make trouble—She was fighting for you, Sharlie, and it was fine of her. But the only part of it all that seemed to stick in his mind was that conclusion.

Edna Arrives

"I'd liked him all this time without ever letting him know it. He said most women have always been too eager about letting him see how they felt about him—He's a bit conceited, I think. I suppose all good-looking men are after they've been chased by women for a great many years."

Edna shrugged her shoulders. "I don't know—but this I do know. I'd rather be his secretary, or stenographer, or whatever I am to him, than I'd be any other man's wife. I'm just a fool, I guess, but that's the way it is."

That was on Monday night. On Saturday night at 8 o'clock Edna left for Phoenix on the Chieftain, the fastest train to the southwest. All week long Dodie had barely spoken to her, and on Saturday she asked the Hannaberys to come over to play cards with her and Sharlie's father, as if nothing out of the ordinary were happening in the family.

Only Sharlie went with Edna in the station—and Jim Barnum. Neither of the girls knew that Jim intended to go along until an hour before train time, when he came knocking on the back door in his old familiar fashion and said that he would drive them downtown.

Sharlie heard her make a little sound of surprise as they walked toward the gates of the train-shed, and she saw Mr. Collins coming through the crowd carrying a square white box under one arm and grinning like a boy.

"Thought I'd better come down to see you off," he said as he came up. His eyes were on Edna, and he did not seem to see Sharlie and Jim, who fell back a little. He held out his box to Edna, took her ticket from her and ushered her through the gates.

Porters began to pick up their portable steps, and Sharlie hurried along the platform to Edna. She was standing very close to Mr. Collins, holding her box of flowers and looking down at it as she listened to something he was saying. As Sharlie and Jim came up to them he leaned forward suddenly and kissed the top of her hat. He did it so quickly that Sharlie wondered if Edna had felt it—or knew that he had done it.

His Good-by

"Good-bye," he said, "Good-bye, all of you." His sharp blue gaze traveled over Sharlie as it had done in all the weeks at the office when he had hardly noticed her—when she had been just another fresh pretty girl to him. He disappeared in the murk of the platform with its confusing mist and smoke and its noise of hissing steam and good-byes.

She and Jim stood there until the train had disappeared in the darkness, and the empty tracks glistened like wet worm tracks under the lights of the train shed. Then they turned away feeling rather flat and futile, as people always do who are left behind at stations. Neither of them spoke until they reached the sidewalk outside the station and were climbing back into Jim's automobile.

The car started. "I never knew that fellow was crazy about her until tonight," Jim said when they had driven a few blocks. "Did you see him kiss her good-bye?"

"I saw him," Sharlie said in a hard bright voice. "There are a great many things we don't know about our friends, usually. For instance I never knew you'd been going around with that red-headed woman I saw you with the other day—and yet you must have been going with her for a long time because she took it for granted that you knew just what she always eats for lunch."

He turned the car into Fourteenth st., out of the theater-bound traffic. "You sound to me as if you were jealous of our Miss Dakin," he remarked. "You aren't, are you, Sharlie, by any chance?"

"Jealous!" Sharlie shot a look of fury at him. "Jealous! As if I cared whom you went around with! Why, when you were running around with Edna—when you were coming right there to our flat after her—I never bothered me the least bit."

She remembered, as she spoke, how jealous she had been that night outside the office building, when she saw Jim waiting for Edna. She remembered how she had gone back into the building to wait there until Mr. Collins left and drive home with him, if she could wangle it. She had gone because she was jealous—

"Jim, I'm hungry, and I'd love something hot to drink. Edna and I were so busy that we had hardly any dinner at all," she said suddenly. "Couldn't we stop somewhere and have something to eat? The way we used to when we were such good friends. Those were the nicest times I ever had, I think."

"You're really the loveliest old egg in the world," she said as the car sped down the street toward an electric light sign with the word EAT in large red bulbs. "I like you better than anyone except Dodie."

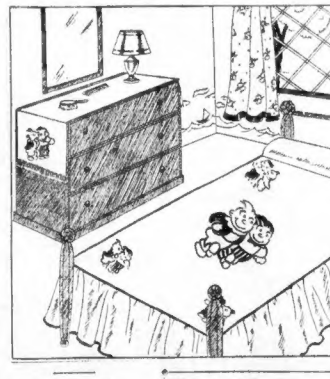
KATZENJAMMER SPREAD

By LAURA WHEELER



Pattern No. 408

THE KATZENJAMMER KIDS! To how many of us grown-ups does that not recall childhood days when we eagerly awaited each Sunday to see the new antics of these irrepressible rascals? And today children all over the country are still waiting, as we did, to see what new fix the Katzenjammer Kids have gotten into. What little friends of theirs, boys or girls, would not be delighted to have them embroidered on their bedspreads, their curtains, or decorating a cushion? So here they are—they have stepped right out of the funny sheet for the first time to help make the rooms of their little friends gay. Though they themselves have never found any devilitry too difficult to carry out, they insisted that when translated onto bedspreads and pillows, they be easy to do as possible. So they have been interpreted in the simplest of embroidery stitches, but at that they lose none of their pert personality.

The pattern consists of a large motif 14 inches square and six motifs 4½ inches square. With the pattern you will find a color chart with two color schemes, showing exactly where to place the colors; concise directions and yardage for making a bedspread for a juvenile bed, as well as suggestions for further uses of the motifs.

DAILY TRUE STORY

-:- Love in the Afternoon

ACROSS THEIR apartment luncheon table Tony Bryant—radio Romeo with a velvet voice—looked intently at his wife. Eve was wearing a beige negligee that failed to do justice to her blonde beauty. Her carefully rouged lips were gathered together in a petulant pout, and the corners of her mouth implied bridled irritation.

"Planning anything special for this afternoon, Eve?" he asked, cautiously seeking a way to challenge her with the insidious gossip the columnists had been printing about her. (Only today one of the scandal scouts had asked . . . "what handsome young crooner a blissfully unaware that his beautiful wife and her co-star of the Adam's-and-Eve Hour are no longer just make-believing?")

Tony sensed the assumed carelessness of her question. It took little imagination for him to visualize a secret rendezvous in h home while h poured blue notes into a studio microphone. He slashed into his steak as he answered bitterly. "Four o'clock. Can't possibly be home before six."

HER EYES FLASHED

"Well, don't be so vehement about it." Eve's eyes flashed, and she raised her voice in resentment at Tony's irritated attitude. "We're darn lucky we're both working. Besides, a wife needs to be away from her husband some of the time."

"Sure, we're both working, but at different times and with—different people." Tony threw his napkin on the table and strode into the hallway for his hat and coat.

Eve shook her head as she heard the door slam . . . She had met Tony when they were booked together for the Middle-Miner Girdle broadcast. He had crooned songs to her and spoken tender love words in the "Night for Love" hour which had thrilled radio listeners everywhere. And when they were married, after a whirlwind courtship, the ceremony had been featured over a coast-to-coast hookup.

For two years they had been blissfully happy. Then their program sponsor left the air waves, and Eve had been switched to a new broadcast, co-starring her with the new find, Adam Frome.

From his music publishers Tony went to a nearby pawnshop and pawned his wife's diamond wrist watch. Then he hurried to the studio.

"Listen, Perkins," he argued with the program director, "I've got a sore throat, and if I go through the whole rehearsal now, I won't be able to sing a note at night."

Tony shuffled his feet nervously. "I know they're right. I have to hurry along now. I'll be back by 8."

He stopped quietly before his apartment door and listened intently . . .

"Adam, I can't go through with this," he heard his wife say. "My husband loves me despite all his strange actions of the past few weeks."

"But, Eve, but can I live without you?" Tony clenched his fingers tightly as he recognized the booming baritone voice.

I know, Adam. I realize that you've been fine through all this, but he loves me dearly. He needs me, too, needs all my love, and sometimes I still care for him as I did before we married. I couldn't go away now. It's not fair; it would break his heart and ruin all our careers."

TONY RUSHED IN

Tony couldn't stand it any longer. He inserted his key in the lock and opened the door.

His wife turned in surprise.

Quit Boy, Help Mother, Says Miss Fairfax

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 21 years old. I am working every day, and get $30 a week. It seems "swelegant" to me these days. In our firm is a very lively girl. She's 28, but she doesn't admit it. We became engaged, and she bosses me. I send $10 a week home to the folks, because father has been laid off and they need it. The girl said I had to stop that, as we ought to put the money away to buy a home, but I couldn't go back on Mother and Dad. Mother's brother is one of the bosses and he told me I was a fool to keep on with her; that she is old enough to be my mother, and he'd fire both of us if we didn't quit being engaged.

MISERABLE.

Dear Miserable. Better take your uncle's advice. Twenty-one and twenty-eight, in this case, is not only a difference of years, but one of experience. On your present salary, you're quite right to help out Mother and Dad. Just tell that lady you feel you're too young to continue the engagement.

Present for Boy

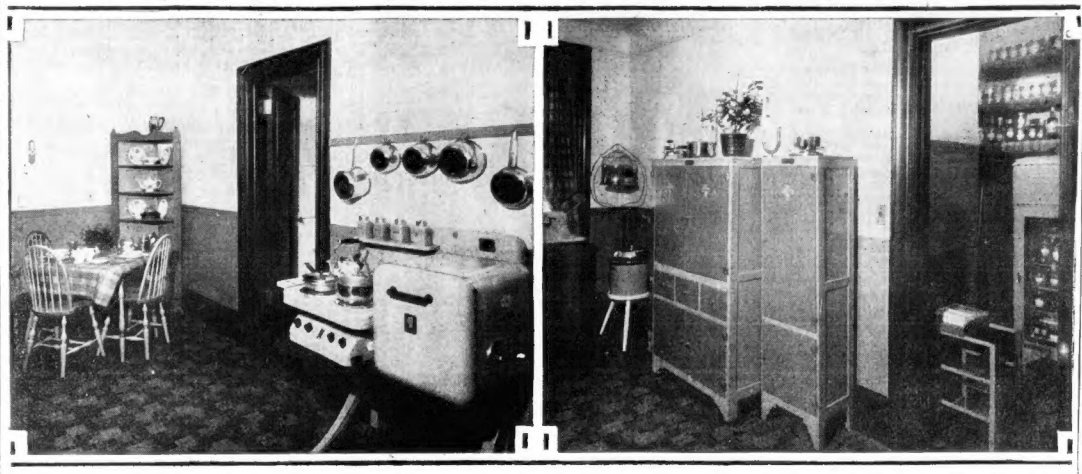
DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been going "steady" with a boy for about two months. His birthday is coming around soon, and I would like to know what's your idea of a nice present for a boy who doesn't smoke.

HIS GIRL.

Dear Girl: Leather things are always reliable presents to give the boy friend: A photograph case, a brief case, a collar box. Books are acceptable for a boy who is fond of reading.

TILE, GREEN AND CREAMY WHITE WITH PLENTY OF COPPER PANS



When the young bride steps into her kitchen, our wish for her is that it will be as delightful and efficient as this one. The color scheme is decidedly practical—tile, soft deep green, and cream—and it's carried out completely in the linoleum, the walls, the curtains, furnishings, and all. There is an electric range, refrigerator, and a little electric sink that is detachable, plus any number of useful electric gadgets. A row of shining copper pans line the wall just as French peasants love to have them, and there is a copper coffeepot, teapot and casserole as well. The peasant idea is carried still farther in the gaily checked curtains and table cover in the same three colors—tile, green and cream—and just for color contrast, there is a little fruited orange tree and orange candles on the cabinet.

Reason Women Cannot Fight in the Wars

By MARGUERITE MOOERS MARSHALL

TO BRING her baby into the world every mother battles with Death and his two dark angels of Pain and Fear. To bring her baby to manhood or womanhood every mother fights Death again, not once but many times—the Death by accident or disease always lying in wait for little children. All mothers are soldiers—but enlisted in the defense troops of Life. That is why they can never be enrolled in armies of offense, whose business is to destroy life instead of giving it.

And that is "the everlasting nay" to Amelia Earhart's suggestion in Washington, the other day, that such women's organizations as the D. A. R. should be willing to bear arms themselves, since they advocate a strong national defense.

The simple truth is that women are too valuable to any country to fight for it. As Bernard Shaw has pointed out, a nation can lose ninety out of every hundred of its young men on the battlefield and still continue to exist, but, if it should lose the same proportion of young women —potential mothers—that nation would be doomed.

Miss Earhart believes, like other peace-loving idealists, that women might really wage the "war to end war."

"If women were drafted I think it would be an effective means of ending war. We glorify war now, using all sorts of propaganda to make it more colorful. If women went to war, had actual combat, it might shock civilization into a realization of the waste and tragedy.

Good Manners

By MRS. BEECKMAN

Don't Pick It Up!

IF YOU drop your fork, or knife, or spoon, or napkin, when dining in a restaurant, leave it where it falls. Don't even try to pick it up. The waiter will bring you a fresh one to replace it.

At a Dance

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

I have invited a very fine young man to our junior prom, which is to take place in a few weeks. I have bought the tickets, but I am uncertain as to who is to pay for the checking of the wraps?

PATSY.

Dear Patsy: When you arrive at the entrance of the place, you go to the ladies' dressing-room and check your wraps, and the young man goes to the men's dressing-room. After the dance, each go for your own wraps, and each gives the attendant the fee.

PATTERN 9602

Save the Money or Buy a Coat---Which Would You Advise?

"School of Clothes"

By Margaret Matson

"DEAR MARGARET MATSON:

"Will you please become an arbitress between my conscience and myself? (I have not confused you with Miss Fairfax, so be relieved.) .

"I do not place my thoughts on paper very coherently, so be patient, please. If you were a young lady, 28, unmarried, no boy friend—not even a prospect, no swanky friends, but devoted to an old-fashioned mother who is a 'saver'—I'm getting ahead of myself.

"I have been out of work two years and yet I have some money still left in the bank. I would just love to own a new spring coat, bought one last year, but it has faded very badly. I feel that I can't wear it this year, not even dyed. Is it extravagant to get a nice Harris tweed swagger coat?

play tennis—on the public courts; swim—in the municipal swimming pool; dance—at public dance halls and summer resorts so while I 'go places' I'm not socially swanky.

"The family attitude is this: Wilful waste makes woeful want. When I'm old I'll be on a welfare list somewhere if I want everything I see. It will soon be warm and I won't need a coat in the daytime and at night its dark and who will notice, etc.

My attitude: Who knows whether I will live to be old and if I do, new clothes will have lost their big thrill. If I look very nice I might connect with a job or a nice boy friend, and yet, and yet—Systematic Saving is the Secret of Success—or is it? It isn't as if I had no coat at all to wear.

What's your attitude, Miss Matson—Get the coat or keep the money and probably still have it next spring when everybody's coat is worn out?"

(Signed) E. G.

"E. G.," since you ask my opinion, it is this: That your problem isn't choosing between saving and spending, but of deciding how much to do of each. The very fact that you still have the money to buy the new coat, after being unemployed for two years, proves that saving has its advantages. Many girls in similar circumstances have been hungry for some time. However, it is very difficult to meet prospective employers in shabby clothes. Every girl knows that. What I should suggest is that you get yourself one very good-looking outfit. Perhaps you can renovate something you have plus the purchase of some effective new accessories. If you need the coat to complete this outfit, get it. If not, then wait. In this way you can give yourself the advantage of a faultless appearance in interviewing men for a job—which is what you want, do you not? Then AFTER you get the job you can think about revamping your entire wardrobe. Isn't that logical? There is no telling how long you will be out of work, nor how much of your present savings you may spend on clothes.

I, personally, do not look upon clothes as "wilful waste" unless one buys more than she needs. And she needs sufficient to keep her from feeling at a disadvantage. And, too, I think we are very likely to confuse "systematic saving" with the tucking away of every available dollar, no matter what it costs us to do so. Budget-makers tell us that the sane and healthful management of money is to divide the income into various portions and spend it accordingly. On December 29, 1932, we published the budget which was accepted by the Mass. Federation of Women's Clubs as being the best of many submitted to them for their approval. It divides the income thus: 23 per cent for food; 20 per cent for shelter; 20 per cent for operating expenses such as gas, electricity et cetera; 14 per cent for clothes; 11 per cent for advancement—education, recreation and the like—and 12 per cent for savings. I should suggest that as soon as your income begins again you sit down and make some such plan for yourself. Then your conscience will be more friendly. You see I have a little slogan, E. G.; it's this: when you can't decide between two things, take a little of both.

How Best to Beautify Gray Hair

By HELEN FOLLETT

GRAY HAIR needs fastidious care. If soap imparts a yellow cast, use white of eggs. Six or seven are necessary even if the hair is short. Beat slightly, add a tablespoon of cold water. Rinse the hair, friction in part of the eggs, rinse, repeat the egg application with a final rousing old rinsing with a bath spray. Add a drop of bluing to a bowl of water, dip in the head—the final rite for the silvered ladies.

Aid Your Lungs

IF BLOOD streams are to purr, cheeks flaunt brown roses, the lungs must have deep drafts of fresh air that wash out the lower lobes. Shallow breathers are likely to have gray skins, dull eyes, lagging steps. Before going to sleep and upon awakening give the lungs a fine rousing old air bath, inhaling through the nostrils, expanding the chest cavity, exhaling through the lips. A long walk every day should be on the calendar of Pretty One's activities. Walking is the ideal exercise: it warms the flesh, stimulates the avenues of elimination, does wonders for the the complexion that has gone stale.

Arch of the Foot

THE IDEAL FOOT has a medium arch. That's the kind that puts up the most graceful appearances, gives best service when there's the date for the long walk, the game of tennis or golf. The lazy woman who hates exercise, never walks a block if she can leap into the gasoline chariot, is the one who develops high arches. To keep feet healthy and happy the heel of the shoe should not lift them more than one inch and a quarter. Of course, the evening indulgence in higher heels is permitted. Cinderellas like stilts.

Simple, Hygienic Living Assures Healthy Life

RECENTLY I attended a dinner given in the honor of a physician who had devoted fifty years of his life to the practice and teaching of medicine. For twenty-five years he practiced medicine in the City of New York. During the remaining quarter of a century he taught at one of the leading medical schools of the country. Many of his colleagues and former students attended the dinner.

This learned man said that though the average expectation of life had doubled since he became a doctor, too many persons still overlook simple rules of hygiene so essential to good health. He stressed the importance of preventive medicine and recalled that in his youth little, if any, attention was given to the prevention of disease.

Headaches, nausea, "biliousness," lack of appetite, burning pain after meals, nervousness, loss of weight and insomnia are a few signs that should never be neglected. Every day we read in the newspapers of the sudden death of a notable. He may have had persistent heartburn which the sufferer neglected and attributed to faulty eating. In reality, the victim had heart disease, but never found time to visit a doctor who could have helped him.

The authorities all agree that the prevention as well as the cure of disease, lies in simple hygienic living. Bear in mind that plenty of fresh air, sunlight, moderate exercise, abundant rest and sleep, daily elimination, simple and nourishing foods, are the foundation of a healthy life.

By ELSIE ROBINSON

Would You Kill Him?

"I BELIEVE in capital punishment," you say.

Very well, that's your privilege. But just how much do you believe in it—and just how much do you know about this thing in which you believe?

Elsie Robinson

Do you sincerely and intelligently believe that you have, by your vote, the right to kill your fellow man—and would you back up that belief by actually cutting the rope or pulling the lever which sends him to his doom?

Or is this just some more of your loose, slazy thinking; and would you really pass out cold if the hangman called your bluff and put the noose in your hand?

All of which I'm asking, because I'm mad. As I write this, Winnie Smith Judd's ghastly trial is still going on; one I've been hearing a lot of slack-jawed talk on the subject of capital punishment. Particularly from Nice Ladies, who never even saw a pig sticking—much less a hanging—yet who think they're talking awful smart and brave when they say they'd send that poor, wretched soul to her death.

Now I do happen to know a little about capital punishment. Because I am a woman, I have never been permitted to see an execution; but I have seen plenty of hard-boiled newspaper men come gagging back from "covering the story", and I have taken pains to learn each hideous detail of the whole foul business which you and I, by our votes, are countenancing.

So I know what I'm talking about when I say that I don't believe in capital punishment.

I'm against it with every atom of decency that there is in me. I consider it the beastliest blot on our so-called civilization. For it not only makes murderers of us but it does something worse—something slimier. It makes cheats and cowards of us all.

For here we are, claiming we want capital punishment—

And voting to have capital punishment—

And hiring men to perform capital punishment—

And yet there isn't one out of a thousand of us who would have the nerve to do the thing we hire those men to do!

You doubt it, lady? All right, answer me this. You have equality now, and a vote. You're supposed to think as straight as a man, and take it as hard on the chin. Very well—let's see what your pose is worth.

Every time a man in your state dies by capital punishment, you help kill him. You kill him as truly as though you drove a knife through his flesh or sent a bullet crashing through his brain. And whether you realize it or not, his dribbling blood and his drying drool clot on your polished nails.

All of which is perfectly fake if you know what you're doing, and you mean what you're saying when you stamp your ballot. But do you?

Would you yourself cut the rope that sends the body jerking, twisting to its death dance on the empty air?

Or, if roasting is more to your taste, would you yourself, kind lady, strap an 18-year-old boy to a chair—a skinny half grown youngster, still green as your own little lad at home—and having strapped him, cruel thong on white young ankle and thin young wrist, would you split his trouser and clamp the death steel tight?

And then would you pull the lever that let the roasting begin—the roasting for which you voted at the polls?

Would you do that, really? Would you back your vote with the actual act? do the thing you hire another voter to do? Then, if you would, you're an honest woman and I respect your opinion.

But if you don't, you're a vicious hypocrite, a white-livered coward, an infernal liar—and as wicked a menace to civilization as the man you sent to death.

Thrilling Romance of Hollywood Today

By Robert Terry Shannon

CHAPTER ONE

The radio announcer stood beside his microphone with a fox-smile on his face and a sleek dinner coat on his back. Great drum-shaped searchlights poured floods of glaring illumination into the forecourt of the theater giving everyone a look of waxen artificiality.

Here in the balmy open air, amid Babylonian columns with the starry sky overhead and marble mosaics underfoot, mingled the most beautiful women and the best-fed men on earth. The rabble—too far back to smell the expensive perfumes—was held in check by ropes and policemen who wore white gloves for the unusual occasion.

Whenever a polished motor car brought up another star, or even an established feature player, the multitudes on the sidewalk cheered and clapped hands. The announcer's excited voice began to fall over itself.

"Just a minute, folks! Here comes Ishil Hall, the screen star! She's wearing a—ha! ha!—good evening, Miss Hall. Miss Hall—Miss Hall—ha! ha!—would you say a few words in the microphone, please, to the folks out there on the air . . ."

Miss Hall consented in a voice warm and living. A silvery evening dress glistened on her body. The announcer's eyes worshipped her loveliness for a moment before he turned to worship the next glittering arrival.

Before the evening was over the whole galaxy of Hollywood passed before the microphone and said approximately the same thing. All confessed themselves to be in a high state of excited anticipation and profess dithe keenest affection for the absent Leni Luneska.

The announcer, who was not going to see the picture at all, declared ecstatically that motion picture history was being made tonight and his words grew increasingly electrical.

WIFE LISTENED IN

At home, his wife listened in a shuddering fear that his tongue would slip and he would say what he really thought about the whole affair. It had never happened but Mrs. Announcer lived in terror until all was safely over.

A stocky gentleman arrived and spoke a few words into the other. He was the mayor of the city.

A domestic-looking man in a gray suit—Tom Mulrooney of detectives—was ignored by the announcer and passed inconspicuously into the theater.

The announcer craned his neck hopefully toward the curb as a tall young man wearing a negligent top coat over his dinner jacket approached. Several women turned their heads to look at him.

This was Lucky Cavanaugh, gambler—with his athletic body and step elastic as a cat's. His skin was clear and tanned over high cheekbones, a bold Roman nose and a solid chin. The eyes were gray, steady, unconsciously arrogant.

No one mistook him for an actor. The bony structure of his countenance belonged to a generation antedating Hollywood; to the breed of frontier and plain and buckbaked cattle towns. This heritage was in his face yet his voice vibrated musically and his manner bore the unmistakable stamp of a cultured superiority.

"LUCKY" ARRIVES

"And here comes Lucky Cavanaugh!" cried the announcer into his contraption. "There's a rumor around—he broke the bank at Caliente last week. Maybe he'll give us his system."

The young man smiled faintly and addressed the microphone.

"Don't you believe a word of it, citizens," he said easily. "There's only one way to beat roulette—and that is to own the wheel. I don't."

There was a burst of cheering from the street and Leni Luneska arrived triumphantly on the arm of a middle-aged gentleman in a silk hat.

She was small and slim in an evening wrap of platinum materia, wrapped tightly across her figure. The searchlights gave her a metallic sheen; around her blonde head there was almost an aura.

Her voice when she spoke for the radio audience was slightly agitated and had the quality of golden wine with bubbles rising. The scarcely perceptible accent carried the flavor of Europe.

"This night," she said, "is the climax of all that I have ever dreamed for and hoped for and worked for. If I am happy, I am also a little frightened. Give me, please, your good thoughts. . . ."

Lucky Cavanaugh took off his dark felt hat and stood quite near watching her. As she left the microphone it was necessary for him to stand aside.

PASSED NEAR

She passed so near that he sensed magnetic radiations from her body. Her face had the fresh young quality of a flower, but the violet-colored eyes were slightly shadowed as from fatigue.

Lucky Cavanaugh's admiration suddenly was complicated by twinges of pity. He had caught, with his gambler's sixth sense, the bewilderment, the lonely and troubled uncertainty of the lovely Leni Luneska as she stood balanced precariously on the very pinnacle of fame.

This knowledge was purely instinctive with him. He was, by profession, a gambler and endowed with some strange quality of human understanding akin to sympathy. Frequently this sense deceived him, but more often it was astoundingly accurate.

Up until this moment the matter had been only idle speculation with him when a rough guttural voice broke out from the crowd held back by the cordon of ropes and policemen.

"Leni! Leni! It is I—Karl! Karl Kruger!"

The voice apparently struck the girl like a bullet. She stopped and even before she turned her head, the color began to recede from her face.

Before the nearest policeman could stop him, he had stooped and dashed under the rope like an animal. With rapid steps he crossed the forecourt and was beside her. Lucky Cavanaugh saw more than five feet from Leni Luneska, saw and heard. The man was a foreigner, shabby, emaciated. His eyes protruded and flamed with excitement. The lips were hard and cruel. He had a heavy accent.

"I am starving, Leni!" he cried. "Do you want me to tell everybody—the whole world—to shout it from the housetops—He began to sing in hand and charge of Tell them I'm all right Leni!"

Leni Luneska's face became a mouth-wide marble. As the policeman seized the man she spoke in strained, pitched words.

"Leave him alone, please . . . I will speak with him . . . old acquaintance . . . later—on the inside."

Her escort's face was blank with understanding. Karl Kruger's shabby stranger has appeared? Read on. This is one of the fascinating stories of the year. The next installment of "Premiere" bares the opening of the plot.

"SHARLIE"

By Beatrice Burton

Concluded From Yesterday

IT WAS 10 O'CLOCK that night when Edna came home. The family were in the living room when she unlocked the door of the apartment and came in a new Edna with her eyes so deep and sparkling that they looked black in the lights of the room, a bunch of white gardenias wilting on the front of her coat and her face looking younger than Sharlie's face.

Edna had her coat off the hook and unpinned the flowers.

"I've been out having dinner with Mr. Collins," she said. "and he told me all about you, Sharlie. From beginning to end. He said that he felt sure you were dazzled by his position and his money and his car—and by his man-of-the-world air, and he tried to explain to me how you had jealous of you, and trying to make trouble—he was fighting for you, Sharlie, and it was fine of her. But the only part of it all that interested me was that Jim mind was that conclusion.

Edna Arrives

"I'd liked him all this time without ever letting him know it. He said most women have always been too eager about letting him see how they felt about him—He's a bit conceited, I think. I suppose all good-looking men are after they've been refused by women for a great many years.

Edna shrugged her shoulders. "I don't know—but this I do know. I'd rather be his secretary, being stenographer, or whatever I am to him, than be an other man's wife. I'm just a fool, I guess, but that's the way it is."

That was on Monday night. On Saturday night at 8 o'clock Edna left for Phoenix on the Chieftain the fastest train to the southwest. All week long Dodie had barely spoken to her, and on Saturday she asked the Hannaberys to come over to play cards with her and Sharlie's father, as if nothing out of the ordinary were happening in the family.

Only Sharlie went with Edna to the station—and Jim Rannim. Neither of the girls knew that Jim intended to go along until an hour before train time, when he came knocking on the back door in his old familiar fashion and said that he would drive them downtown.

Sharlie heard her make a little sound of surprise as they walked toward the gates of the train shed and she saw Mr. Collins coming through the crowd carrying a square white box under one arm and grinning like a hoi.

"Thought I'd better come down to see you off," he said as he came up. His eyes were on Edna, and he did not seem to see Sharlie and Jim, who fell back a little. He held out his box to Edna, took her ticket from her and ushered her through the gates.

Porters began to pick up their portable steps, and Sharlie hurried along the platform to Edna. She was standing very close to Mr. Collins, holding her box of flowers and looking down at it as he listened to something he was saying in a low voice. A porter was helping her up the steps, and Mr. Collins was following her. Edna looked back at Sharlie and Jim, waved her hand and smiled.

"Good-bye," he said, "Good-bye, all of you." His sharp blue eyes traveled over Sharlie as it had done in all the weeks at the office when he had hardly noticed her—then she had been just another fresh pretty girl to him. He disappeared in the mouth of the platform with Mr. Collins, and the steps were pulled away, and Jim found there was the train had disappeared in the distance, and the empty tracks lay before him. A wagon rolled under the sides of the train shed. Then they started away, feeling rather flat and futile as people always do who see off—behind at stations. Neither of them spoke until they reached the sidewalk outside the station and were climbing back into Jim's automobile.

The car started. "I never knew that fellow was crazy about her until tonight," Jim said when they had driven a few blocks. "Did you see him kiss her good bye?"

"I saw him." Sharlie said in a hard bright voice. "There are a great many things we don't know about our friends, usually. For instance I never knew you'd been going around with that red-headed woman. I saw you with the other day—and yet you must have been going with her for a long time because she took it for granted that you knew just what she always ate for lunch."

He turned the car into Four Fourth st., out of the theater-bound traffic. "You sound to me as if you were jealous of me, Miss Dodkin," he remarked. "You aren't are you, sharlie, by any chance?"

"Jealous!" Sharlie shot a look of fury at him. "Jealous! As if I cared whom you went around with! Why, when you were running around with Edna—when you were coming right there to our flat after her—it never bothered me the least bit."

She remembered, as she spoke how jealous she had been that night outside the office building when she saw Jim waiting for Edna. She remembered how she had come back into the office to wait there until Mr. Collins left and drive home with him, if she could wangle it. She had gone because she was jealous—

"Jim, I'm hungry, and I'd love something hot to drink. Edna and I were so busy that we had hardly any dinner at all," she said suddenly. "Couldn't we stop somewhere and have something to eat? The way we used to when we were such good friends. Those were the nicest times I ever had, I think."

"You're really the loveliest old egg in the world," she said as the car sped down the street toward an electric light sign with the word EAT in large red bulbs, "I like you better than anyone except Dodie."

Pattern No. 409

THE KATZENJAMMER KIDS! To how many of us grown-ups does that not recall childhood days when we eagerly awaited each Sunday to see the new antics of these irrepressible rascals? And today children all over the country are still waiting, as we did, to see what new fix the Katzenjammer Kids have gotten into. What little friends of theirs, boys or girls, would not be delighted to have them embroidered on their bedspreads, their curtains, or decorating a cushion? So here they are—they have stepped right out of the funny sheet for the first time to help make the rooms of their little friends gay. Though they themselves have never found any deviltry too difficult to carry out, they insisted that when translated onto bedspreads and pillows, they be as easy to do as possible. So they have been interpreted in the simplest of embroidery stitches, but so that they lose none of their pert personality.

The pattern consists of a large motif 14 inches square and six motifs 4½ inches square. With the pattern you will find a color chart with two color schemes showing exactly where to place the colors; concise directions and yardage for making a bedspread for a juvenile bed, as well as suggestions for further uses of the motifs.

DAILY TRUE STORY

-:- Love in Afternoo

ACROSS THEIR apartment luncheon table Tony Bryant—radio Romeo with a velvet voice—looked intently at his wife. Eve was wearing a beige negligee that failed to do justice to her blondie beauty. Her carefully rouged lips were gathered together in a petulant pout and the corners of her mouth implied bridled irritation.

"Planning anything special for this afternoon, Eve?" he asked, cautiously seeking a way to challenge her with the insidious gossip the columnists had been printing about her. Only today one of the scandal scribes had asked . . . "what handsome young crooner is blissfully unaware that his beautiful wife and her ex-star of the Adam-and-Eva Hour are no longer just makebelieving?"

Tony sensed the assumed carelessness of her question. It took little imagination for him to visualize a secret rendezvous in her home while he poured love notes into a studio microphone. He washed into his steak as he answered briefly. "Four o'clock. Can't possibly be home before six."

HER EYES FLASHED

"Well, don't be so vehement about it." Eves eyes flashed, and she raised her voice in resentment at Tony's irritated attitude. "We're darn lucky we're both working. Besides, a wife needs to be away from her husband some of the time."

"Sure, we're both working, but at different times and with—different people." Tony threw his napkin on the table and strode into the hallway for his hat and coat.

Eve shook her head as she heard the door slam. She had met Tony when they were brought together for the Cuddle-Closer Girdle broadcast. He had crooned songs to her and spoken tender love words in the "Night for Love" hour which had thrilled radio listeners everywhere. And when they were married, after a whirlwind courtship, the ceremony had been featured over a coast-to-coast hookup.

For two years they had been happy. Then the program sponsor left the air waves and Eve had been switched to a new broadcast featuring her with the new find Adam Frome.

From his music publisher Tony went to a nearby pawnshop and purchased a revolver. Then he hurried to the studio.

"Listen, Perkins," he argued with the program director, "I've got a sore throat, and if I go through the whole rehearsal now, I won't be able to sing a note tonight."

"Okay, Tony, but just listen to the three songs run through for the arrangements, so you're sure they're all right."

"I know they're right. I have to hurry along now. I'll be back in a—"

Outside the imposing broadcasting studio Tony hailed a cab and ordered the driver to stop him off a block from his apartment house.

He stepped quietly before his apartment door and listened intently.

"Adam, I can't go through with this," he heard his wife say. "My husband loves me despite all his strange actions of the past few days."

"But Eve, how can I live without you?" Tony clenched his fist as Adam's voice was heard pleading.

"I love Adam. I realize that I—I—this is a terrible thing to say, but we love me dearly. He needs me, you needs all my love and sympathy. I will care for him as I did before we married. I couldn't go away now. It's not fair. I wouldn't break his heart and ruin all our careers."

TONY RUSHED IN

Tony couldn't stand it any longer. He inserted his key in the lock and opened the door. His wife turned in surprise.

"Why the mad rush?" she asked quietly.

Where—who—" he stammered as he realized his wife was alone.

"Oh, that," she said, smiling as she switched off the photograph. "I was just listening to a transcription of my next program—Part of the Adam and Eve drama, you know. It online correct mistakes before we go on the air."

LICE PASS RACKET CURE TO UNCLE SAM

New York May 2 (INS)—Virtually admitting that to date racketeers are too strong for the largest police force in the world police must rely on federal income tax prosecutions to curb racketeers.

At the same time Assistant District Attorney Crain of New York County moved to smash the racketeering rackets by the simple method of putting a union official out of business dealers that one of the chief reasons for the Marshall waterfront strike was opposition to the presence of Curran, a former convict and ex-con prosecutor.

DUE TO PROHIBITION

Crain said, in addition, that William Jeremiah Morgan, president of the Brooklyn Bridge Company and a Gold Coast figure, had created world of racketeers with gang enforcement squads to perform. Morgan had been arrested to help the district attorney's office in its drive on racketeers.

It was also learned that one of the district attorney's office had been instructed to assemble evidence against known racketeers in the industries raided.

In his statement, Commissioner Bolan said police would continue to prosecute racketeers wherever possible. He said that they had been handicapped in their chief weapon at their command, to coin a phrase, "income tax raps" by the federal authorities. "The income tax law, not the most effective weapon for the job," he said.

"I believe racketeering has been due primarily to prohibition. It reached its peak about a year and a half ago, and it is now on the decline."

RACKETS GAIN SAYS JUDGE

U. S. Atty. Medalie denied he expects that the federal government would indict 41 New York gangsters and racketeers, who were Medalie declared, somewhere among the men working under Hugo Mogilan, chief of the Moscarone unit of the Department of Internal Revenue, were working exclusively on incomes of several racketeers.

Taking issue with Police Commissioner Bolan, Judge Joseph E. Corrigan said racketeering is growing.

"I have a solution in mind," Corrigan said, "Some step should be taken whereby the mayor and the district-attorneys should come from different political parties. Then 'puff' in one quarter would prove of no avail in the other.

Askren Heads War on Rackets in Seattle

Seattle, May 2 (U. S. Wash.)—D. Askren, one time federal prosecutor of Pierce County and former State Supreme Court Justice, has accepted the chairmanship of the Citizens crusade against racketeers.

As the first move in the war to end extortion rackets, he invited a group of citizens to meet with him in his office when a committee to co-operate with an enforcement authorities and a board of strategy will be created.

Judge Askren accepted leadership of the crusade only after he had failed to get Police Chief Claire Matz, Police Prosecutor Ed Danzer and Chief of Police Neils Juul to consider the job.

"This is not a time for the passing of resolutions. Racketeering can be stopped. And it is the people of Seattle that can stop it."

U.S. DEBT NEARS 23 BILLIONS

Washington, May 2 (AP)—The nation's public debt has increased three billion dollars in the last year.

On April 30 it stood at $21,441,-209,176 compared to $18,506,605,430 on the same date a year ago.

Treasury officials declined to estimate how much tax had been collected from beer in April and said the final figures probably would not be available until the middle of May.

POLO VERDICT UNSETTLED

An extension of time until May 15 in filing his report on the suit of Arthur Mason of Hamilton against Frederick H. Prince, wealthy sportsman, has been asked by U. S. Atty. Fredegick H. Tarr, who acted as auditor in the case.

Atty. Tarr's report was originally scheduled to be filed at Salem court on or before May 1.

The suit was brought by Mason as the result of a polo game in which he and Prince took part at Myopia Hunt Club during the summer of 1929. Mason alleged that he and Prince were in collision during the game and that later Prince struck him a terrific blow on the head with his polo mallet. Boston and North Shore society leaders turned out for the hearing at Salem court.

Latest From Tree Front

—By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER—

President Roosevelt's reforestation plan is tough on us mugs who can't tell toadstools from mushrooms.

They will all be growing in the woods pretty soon. And the Republican threat of tall grass on Broadway ain't as bad as the Democratic promise of big oaks in the Fairway.

Haven't heard anything of those babes in the woods who went out to plant all those forests. The toughest job in that army is guard duty round a lunch wagon.

We would like to be with them in weather like this with our head and feet sticking out of a pup tent and bright stars for traffic lights.

Wish the boys would let us know when the trees are big enough to keep the sun out of your face, the birds are singing in the branches and the apples are ripe.

Sees Leadership

Miss Viola Ilma, editor and publisher of "Modern Youth," a literary magazine by which she hopes to build a movement by which the youth of today will emerge as leaders in civic and cultural life.

6 IN HOSPITAL IN PEABODY CRASH

Six persons were injured, two of them seriously today in a head-on collision of two automobiles near Forest st., Peabody, on the Newburyport turnpike.

The seriously injured were James Thornton of Boston and Miss Vera Carlson of Beacon st., Boston, both of whom were taken into the Danvers State Hospital. Thornton's name is on the danger list.

Taken to Peabody Hospital were Mr. and Mrs. Lynwood Foss of Putnam rd., Somerville, Mrs. Charlotte Estes of Boston st., Middleton, and Miss Clara LeBlanc of the same address.

Thornton and Miss Carlson were passengers in a car driven, police say, by Foss, while Miss Le Blanc was in the other car driven by Mrs. Estes.

GIRL EDITOR IN YOUTH MOVE

Enrollment of the youth of the nation into a powerful movement, out of which the leaders of the civic, intellectual and cultural leaders will emerge, is the dream of Miss Viola Ilma, editor and publisher of Modern Youth, a monthly literary magazine.

Miss Ilma, a New York girl, who is only 23, has been here a week organizing among local college men and girls what she hopes will become the nucleus of the Youth movement in this section of the country. She has addressed the Womens City Club on the aims and ideals of Modern Youth, and yesterday was the luncheon guest of Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller.

Modern Youth, as a magazine is unique. None of its staff members is or can be over 30 years of age. No contributions are accepted from anyone who has passed that mark. The magazine is of, for and by the youth of the country.

Miss Ilma launched her magazine last January without a penny of capital. She convinced a Chicago publisher to print the magazine on the gamble that it would make money. It succeeded. She then got 100 persons to pledge $10 a month to pay necessary expenses.

In the six months the magazine has been in existence, she has received nearly 300,000 manuscripts.

Pigeons at Harvard Are a Hardy Lot

Harvard in using roman candles to try to scare pigeons away from Langdell Hall, the law school library building, but results thus far indicate that the pigeons like the fireworks.

The birds get out of their roosts over the windows while the show is in progress, but they are back again by daylight, and probably long before.

HUNGER MARCH COMMITTEE AWAITS ELY

Most Members of the Army Start Return Trip to Homes

Details of police were rushed to the State House and guards patrolled the corridors today as the hunger marchers gathered again on Boston Common.

After their somewhat flat May Day showing yesterday on the Common, the less than 300 hunger marchers of an expected number of at least 1000 announced that they would storm the State House today.

Police massed about the building, guarding all entrances and with four mounted officers included, drove any such idea out of the hunger marchers' heads.

MANY START FOR HOME

Two hours later, discouraged over the wait, and perhaps by the sight of the Boston University R. O. T. C. drilling on the Boston Common parade ground, most of the "hunger marchers" climbed into trucks and rolled away for home.

They left behind them practically only the committee waiting to see Gov. Ely in the afternoon, and with the departure of the main body most of the police were withdrawn from the State House.

More than a score of police were visible outside the State House, and others were believed held in readiness in the basement as one column of the marchers numbering 26, swung up Beacon st.

When the marchers sighted the police drawn up in front of the State House they swung their column off into across the street and proceeded through the Common to the mall.

Here they were joined by the others of the motley group, and although they had a speaking permit for one hour they lay down on the damp ground instead. At 2 p. m., when they were told yesterday at the State House that Gov. Ely would meet their committee of six

Red Tie Wins Him Black Eye

The conviction that red neckties are bad for the complexion is firmly implanted in the mind of Frank Wlocyalczak, 34, of Williams st., Chelsea, whose bright red tie earned him a black eye and a damaged nose.

Frank was in Chelsea court today and testified that he was choked and beaten by Luke Odium, 40, of Division st., on Sunday. Luke explained to the court that his wife had been robbed of $7. Why a man with a red necktie—

Without waiting for any further description of the robber, Luke fared forth in fury, and fell upon Frank, the first man wearing a red necktie that he encountered.

Judge Cutler sentenced Luke to 10 days for assault, but suspended it, probably on the ground that a red necktie is just cause for suspicion and provocation.

Debs Hand Their Harvard Critics :-: A Few Staggering Jolts

SOME HARVARD BOYS STUPID

"POOR BOY!" SAYS JANE BANCROFT

"This lad takes the exception and classifies her as the rule, said Jane Bancroft, stately debutante, who is noted, too, for her horsemanship. "Too bad the poor boy doesn't know more of us."

"HE'S TOO YOUNG TO KNOW"

Catherine Blake said: "It's too bad for this lad. He should meet some of us, then he'd know—but, of course, he's too young. Yale and Princeton men are much nicer anyway."

Society Girls Say Harvard Boy 'Is Too Young to Know'

By RUTH McGLEBBE

[illegible] debutantes today [illegible] their Harvard [illegible] Taking [illegible] sparkling repartee [illegible] leisurely dismissed the charge of F. E. Sweetser, Hasty and Immature on the ground that he was [illegible] young to know anything.

"There are boys AND boys," Catherine Blake, stunning debutante this year's contingent, announced, raising her eyebrows and waving aside the collegiate's views about her and her sisters.

Sweetser [illegible] recent issue [illegible] Hub [illegible] unctuously took [illegible] girls for a merry [illegible] [illegible] said they were [illegible] [illegible] and had no [illegible] [illegible] did they were supercilious.

PITY POOR FRESHMAN

Between moments of [illegible] smart fashions in preparation for the Charlotte Cushman Club [illegible] ton show, which takes place next Friday at Mrs. Richard Saltonstall's estate on Chestnut Hill, some of the season's most beautiful girls ridiculed the charges of their youth and severest critic.

They all pitied the poor [illegible] man and his misfortune in having met the [illegible] edictions of Hub ton society.

"What a reflection on his ability to reach us!" they agreed.

Catherine Blake, [illegible] [illegible] good [illegible] and very popular, read the [illegible] edictions of the Harvard youth and then said:

"Harvard boys, some of them, are like that. They meet a few girls who, unfortunately, don't represent the real group of girls and they think all of us are the same. It is too bad for this lad. He ought to get about more and meet us.

"There are boys AND boys. There are girls AND girls. But Harvard gentlemen keep on insisting that the end combines two groups of girls who are the same in all ways.

LIKE YALE BETTER

"If you ask me, I think Harvard boys are duller and more boring than Princeton or Yale men, for instance. These out of town collegians keep things moving for us debutantes. They have a steady stream of chatter, a good line, if you know what I mean, which keeps the girl in good conversation and moving.

As for some Harvard men, they rely too much—much too much—on our line. And even when we do start the conversation, very often they have no comeback.

Harvard men should look to their own laurels before condemning Boston society girls. After all, this boy is only a freshman. He doesn't know as much and what opinion he has formed, is probably snap judgment.

SOME CRIMSONS STUPID

Landsdale Watson, one of the most popular of the debutantes and [illegible] the sentiments of Miss Blake as did Jane Bancroft and several others who refused to be quoted.

"They can't mean me," Miss Watson, petite and beautiful, laughed. "I come from Arkansas and am not a Boston debutante. That should let me out. But if you ask me confidentially, some of the Harvard boys I've met," she continued to laugh out an entering western drawl, "some of them have been downright stupid."

Miss Lynn Bancroft, maiden [illegible] boredom at Mr Sweetser of Harvard, who are to model at tonight's [illegible] Harvard men were not important enough to even think about, let alone comment on, she said.

"There are exceptions to every rule. This lad has taken the few exceptions and classified all debutantes accordingly. Too bad for the poor boy! He doesn't know most of us."

JUST TOO BAD

And so the group echoed their [illegible] beautiful in Mr. Sweetser, Harvard [illegible] who are to model at the fashion show, revealed themselves [illegible] amateur clothes-horses.

"He should see us now. Maybe he'd change his opinion," one of them said.

It was a take it or leave attitude. And if Mr. Sweetser didn't want to take it—too bad for Mr. Sweetser.

At any rate, the Harvard freshman started something, for if ever any of these girls meet him, it will be again, just too bad for Mr Sweetser.

BROOKLINE IN FENCE PROTEST

Brookline protests against a traffic scheme adopted by the selectmen yesterday for the junction of Summit ave and Beacon st gained the support today of Walter Dickinson, 2 Summit ave, one of the [illegible] the original petition for [illegible] at the intersection to prevent a [illegible]

"What the selectment have done smacks of Hitlerism," said Atkinson. "They have adopted a plan without a public hearing, in the most high-handed fashion, acting hastily after doing nothing for seven years. I doubt if their plan is legal."

The selectmen, despite protest, started erecting the barrier self chain fence which reduces the width of Summit ave. from 100 to 40 feet. The Corey Hill Improvement Association and others claim this makes it impossible to make a safe turn there. Supt of Street Daniel G Lacy favors a traffic light.

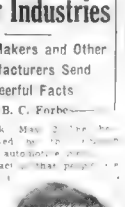
Motor Makers and Other Manufacturers Send Cheerful Facts

By B. C. Forbes

New York, May 2.—The best news received by me comes from automotive sources.

The big fact is that people are buying more automobiles than manufacturers had expected.



B. C. Forbes

Paul Hoffman, Studebaker's sales generalissimo, before he was made receiver, tells me that, by using newspaper advertising to acquaint dealers with the real facts, sales immediately followed. Result: Sales actually exceeded anything he expected since the best month of the year, June 1929. Another happy augury is the most aggressive plan for General Motors has generally announced, recent expansion in sales. Cheerful tidings come from William A. Ellis, general sales manager of B. O. P., reasoning Buick, Oldsmobile, Pontiac. Sales Manager R. K. White tells me that consumer demand declared appeared in the April factory schedule of 1,000 cars. Eighth from 6,000 to 7,000. H. J. Klimzler, general sales manager of Chevrolet, is particularly happy over recent events. Down at the bombarding headquarters of orders for immediate delivery.

Robert C. Graham, of Graham-Paige Motors, Inc., that shipments last month were larger than in April, 1932.

General Sales Manager E. Poxson, of Reo, wires

"We are very optimistic over improvement in our business and are confident that conditions warrant aggressive action. We are, therefore, preparing a radio and magazine campaign announcing one of the greatest automobile improvements since the self starter, namely, the Reo self-shifter, an amazing device which does away with the gear shift lever, adds years to automobiles and completely reverses present-day conceptions of automobile driving."

President A. G. Bean of White Motor, has received a truck order from Kroger Grocery Since approximately $100,000 for chassis alone. Truck orders from brewers are also pouring in, Says Mr. Bean:

"We are encouraged with the apparent betterment in general business. Our district and branch offices showed a 22 per cent gain last quarter as compared with 1932 and our April business is 50 per cent ahead of March."

President Howard E. Blood of Norge tells me that May promises to eclipse April of last year, the best month in the company's history, by about 25 per cent. One recent day 17 carloads of refrigerators were dispatched to Philadelphia. Yesterday 434 refrigerators were shipped to a Chicago dealer. One day a week ago New York order alone called for 1,700 units, the first half of that week orders were booked for more than offered by the new demand, due to the lowest ever, prices and terms, especially for high-grade types.

The Iron Fireman Company of Portland, Oregon, is today enjoying more business than 12 months ago.

Companies interested in coal-burning equipment of the conditioning industry are about to announce most extensive sales plans. Many believe that this relative to industry is destined shortly to become a factor of supreme importance in stimulating early turn of industrial activity and prosperity.

BOTH COMEDY AND MELODRAMA Her Greatest Role MAY ROBSON SELECTED FOR PRIZE ROLE

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

It may be possible, of course, though hardly probable, that domestic relations along the shores of Lake Como are as loosely conducted as Luigi Chiarelli draws them in "The Mask and the Face." This tangled comedy of clandestine affairs brought the Theater Guild back to the Colonial last evening for a week of experimentation in sex and sensation. The translation was by W. Somerset Maugham, and it may be said of his share in the work that none of the fire and temperament of the original Italian script was omitted. Nor in the detailed intrigues of the author's machinations was anything left to the imagination. The women knew what they wanted and applied feminine strategy to the utmost.

* * *

It was jumbled comedy, though not without reasonable interest. Their relations seemed the order of the day, but the fact which strangely enough created no alarm in the minds of the characters. There was one exception. The blustering Count Paolo (Stanley Ridges) declared he would kill his wife if he discovered her in circumstances more exciting than pure. He had a chance. While his voice was raising and he stormed in right noble indignation, his nerve deserted him through his fear of the ridiculous. Nerveless spouse the outburst of sensuous Silvia (Judith Anderson) was disposed of by handkerchief instead of by pistol fire. Whereupon, Mr. Maugham proceeded to unsnipple Signora Sarelli's far-flung plot. A Philip Hale whispered across the aisle. It was best to buy the Colonel was so dangerous for recently married men.

With Sincerity

In the interest of mystery, the outraged husband, having successfully put his erring wife across the border, promptly announced he had killed her by drowning and delivered himself to the police. He had handed too much of his own homicidal intent and this pride-saving gesture seemed necessary to his own peace of mind. Stanley Ridges acted the distracted husband with much gusto and many words. It was he, of course, who preached the author's basic text—that palliation was harder to bear than the knowledge of sin itself. He would slay the wife and ignore her paramour. Naturally, in the course of events, this masculine firebrand relented and everything was forgiven. Mr. Ridges made the most of a role that led him into grotesque emotions—some of them farcical. But he acted with sincerity.

As for Miss Anderson, one might have been on a more

Honest Laughs

"The Mask and the Face" is drawing-room comedy, stimulated with flashes of melodrama and, now and then, a bit of farce. Its complications are multiple—even bewildering. But there is tucked away between its lines a good measure of honest laughs. It might as well been called "What Is Home Without a Scandal?"

Novelties on Scollay Stage

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

The new bill at the Scollay yesterday brought Richard Barthelmess to the screen in "Central Airport," and eight acts to the stage. The vaudeville takes a novel twist in that it highlights a feature from the sporting world. Winners in the six-day bicycle races are presented in action as the headliners, the other turns are standard variety type.

Norman Hill and Dave Lands are introduced by Bobby Walthour. The stage is given track atmosphere by the presence of an apparatus that permits racing of the bikes turning rollers, which connect with a large disc wherein miniatures reveal the progress of the race.

Opening the program was an unusual number. Cardona and Chappelle have for equipment themselves and a stairway. A lady, rather heavy it must be said is held aloft while the man in the act contorts himself on the stairs and then rolls him over and over up the stairs. The action is instructive and the strength and expertness of the male performer evoked great applause.

The Frank Sabini Co. get plenty of laughs with some clowning and instrumental music. Ben Dova follows with his "drunk" dance and his antics atop a street lamp. Marie May pioneers with a new song, scoring at the. The three Stewart Sisters sing and pantomime, and one gets off a fine imitation of Jo Penner. Cigar and all.

Miss Gold & Ray are known about getting from the clapping. Miss Gold Kerr Dance Revue is a rich one, perhaps the best the Scollay has had this year.

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

(copyright, 1933, by Universal Service, Inc.)

Los Angeles, May 2—I am sure Damon Runyon will be pleased when he hears that May Robson is Columbia's choice for the colorful "Madame La Gimp." Nearly everybody has read the Runyon story in which the old lady, who sells apples from a cart, keeps her daughter in convent in Spain and writes glowing letters of her social life. When the daughter comes to New York with her fiance the gangsters contribute to put the old lady up in style.

Miss Robson, it may interest you to know, is to have a Marie Dressler career mapped out for her by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. She is under contract to M-G-M.

From Carl Laemmle, president and the other members of the cast are Walter Wilkinson, Glenda Farrell and Guy Kibbee. The adaptation will be entrusted to Robert Riskin.

Will Rogers' Desire

You can always depend upon Will Rogers to say the unexpected. He was a guest at the Hollywood Club last Sunday and said he had met Clara Bow and now the one thing he lived for was to meet Mae West. Mae will probably send him a telegram if she hears this request.

* * *

Pay for Her Trip

Surprised to hear that Sally Eilers may do a little picture-making herself in London. The Gaumont Picture Company and the Fox Film Company function as one and they have put in a bid for Sally's services. She is paying her own expenses to Europe and she may feel that it's a good way to pay for her trip.

Exeter Theater

No Cagey for Gloria

I might like to say that Mordaunt Hawkswanson wouldn't make a picture for Columbia, but I suppose the "Twentieth Century" of it is cold. The comedy angle isn't appeal to Gloria. She feels her best bet lies in the dramatic field and she is waiting for such a story before she will change in a contract.

MGEORGE LEWIS, whose pad English house and grounds a one of the showplaces of Bevly Hills, entertaining with dinner party. The LEWIS is on the market. BADGE ENS has been vacationing in San Francisco. Wonder when BADGE and TOM GALLERY are going to take the big step? The HARRY BEAUMONTS are in about three weeks for Pan. They are taking the twins and expect to be gone for months. HELEN HAYES is in Washington, having returned from her trip abroad. She is coming direct to Hollywood. That's all today.

New Screen Angle in "Shame"

"Shame," new film at the Fine Arts, is all the more interesting because it reveals the Soviet screen dramatic breaking away from the worst heaviness of treatment. Where the Russian lenses have been turned upon masses and machines "Shame" gives the individual a chance. It is a story of the workers but handled more humanly and with a good deal more concentration upon the emotions than has been usual.

Though it does not measure up to "Road to Life" the new picture has many good points. The best is its acting, which is about faultless. Performers fit so neatly into the scheme of hard labor that one couldn't tell roller in the boilerroom from actor. "Shame" is evidently made for the Slav audiences impressing upon them the value of loyalty to plan and counter-plan of manual operations. All must work for the common good; that's the message of the movie.

The Abbey Theater Players opened their final week at the Hollis last night, presenting a double bill. It was the usual type of acting, the highest theatrical present day drama affords. There was an enthusiastic audience, whose numbers were important enough to suggest the wisdom of an extension of the troupe's engagement in Boston. Through two plays the house was held to the hilt and the gesture, for a perfect evening's entertainment.

* * *

The Words Upon the Window Pane," a new piece by W. B. Yeats, in one act, opened the program. It proved to be a famous playwright's gesture in sentimental way. Its value was chiefly elocutionary, with a tendency to jog the memory on literature bearing on Dean Swift and his Stella and Vanessa. The spirit medium holds a seance in a house reputed to have once been Stella's residence; and instead of kindred ghosts, relate to the folk seated about the room, there come the voices of Swift and his two lady friends. There was little point, and little action, but it was interesting just the same.

May Craig as the medium was the center, naturally. This talented actress was so realistic in performance that one's mind hurried to real seances attended in other days.

* * *

"The Whiteheaded Boy," a three acts, previously performed, was the other play of the evening. This is a hilarious comedy, by Lennox Robinson. The entire cast shining brilliantly

By JACK CONWAY

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN SPORTS

MR. BOSTON

I want you to meet John Krone. He is a wrestling promoter who operates in the Chicago Coliseum. As a wrestling promoter, would not devote two lines of space to John Krone, but as a man with convictions and courage he is entitled to a great deal of attention. Young men wishing to get ahead in the world can well study the life of John Krone, especially that part which deals with his legal battle with the Illinois Athletic Commission.

John Krone was the promoter of the recent wrestling bout between Jim Londos, the great Greek God, and Jumping Joe Savoldi, who used to race around the rival ends and rip through the opposing line when holding down a backfield job for Notre Dame.

The bout was advertised as for the heavy weight wrestling championship of the world. This was due to the fact Londos has gained title recognition from various athletic commissions.

Everybody with the exception of Savoldi thought Londos would wrap up the former Notre Dame star and pin him to the mat was when he got around to it. Savoldi had a notion he was fast and strong enough to defeat the veteran Londos. He made his bid and tossed Londos, scoring the only fall of the match.

The Illinois Athletic Commission then conducted an investigation. Somebody charged Savoldi double-crossed Londos. This charge alone indicated that as far as Savoldi was concerned the match was on the level. He was in there to win. Nobody even suggested Londos had not done his best.

The commission upheld the decision of the official referee, banned wrestling in Illinois. It probably felt it had to do something to justify its existence.

John Carried His Fight Into the Courts

When the commission made known its ruling, John Krone smiled. He had just begun to fight. He secured the best legal talent possible and put his case before the Superior Court of Cook County. He asked that the Illinois Athletic Commission be restrained from interfering with a bout he had arranged between Ed (Strangler) Browning and Strangler Lewis. He also asked for an injunction against commission interference at other bouts he had arranged for this month.

It appears John Krone had paid for a license to stage wrestling bouts in Illinois for 1933, that he had posted a bond with the commission, that he had hired the Chicago Coliseum and had entered into contracts with various wrestlers. Krone felt this circumstance gave him some rights. The court held a similar opinion, Judge Wilham J. Lindsay ruled as follows:

"It is ordered by the court that a writ of injunction as prayed for in said bill of complaint restraining said commission from interfering with the said matches for good faith as shown. It is further ordered that the injunction issue without bond."

Krone then staged the Browning-Lewis bout, and went ahead with his regular program. He has another show carded for Thursday night, and plans to conduct it under the court order.

The Illinois Athletic Commission at least possessed sufficient intelligence to realize it had been beaten, and that a promoter by the name of John Krone could not be used as a political football. So it did a right about face, and lifted its foolish and meaningless ban on wrestling.

Jack Sharkey Already Training for Carnera Bout

Jack Sharkey is already in training for his 15-round world's heavyweight championship bout with Primo Carnera which will be staged at the Yankee Stadium on June 29. I met Sharkey following his return from a ten-day fishing trip to Nova Scotia.

"I did plenty of tramping through the woods and brush," said Sharkey. "At times George Lee of Worcester and myself lugged a canoe a mile from one body of water to another. It is hard work tramping through rough country, but it is great for one's legs. No fighter is any better than his legs. One may be able to knock over a building with a right hand punch, but if not able to stand up he does not get to first base.

"I caught quite a few salmon. One weighed 12 pounds, and I got a great thrill when I pulled it from the water. The weather was cold, but it was a clear most of the time.

"I shall probably return to Nova Scotia for another short trip. Then I'll open a training camp somewhere in New York State and get down to the serious business of getting ready for Carnera.

"Primo has improved a great deal since I defeated him a year ago last fall. He is faster and knows more about boxing. He has tremendous strength which is why I am devoting so much time to building up my general physical condition. I will require all the strength possible when I get tangled up with Carnera at close quarters."

Secret N. E. P. G. O. Tourney Draws Only Seven Pros

There was no much secrecy attached to the opening of the New England Professional Golfers' Organization that even the members were not aware of the tournament. As a result, only seven players put in appearance at the Norfolk Hunt Club and after playing 18 holes the event was cancelled.

The N. E. P. G. O. will swing into action again next Monday, so the course will be announced later in the week.

After a meeting Pres. Jack Shea announced that each Class A member of the N. E. P. G. O. may invite another professional, who is not a member of the organization to play in all local tournaments.

And here is Donie Bush, pilot of the Reds, who open a three-game series with the Braves at the Tepee today. Donie's "Thinker" pose, chin in hand, and his solemn mien bode ill for the Tribesmen.

Francis Hogan, he of the large girth and guileless smile, calls for a high one inside. Francis could be more slim. But HOW he works those tossers! Look at the pitching records, then forgive Hogan his extra pounds.

A Young Lochinvar has come out of the West into the hearts of the Braves' followers. He's Dick Gyselman, ready to snag a hard drive at third base. He is the ace rookie of the '33 crop. Dick can field anything short of a rifle bullet, it seems. Richard can hit well, too.

Bill McKechnie, blanket-swathed like some real Brave, thinks up trouble for the bold, bad Reds. Is Will canny? Ask the Braves' foes.

SOX OPEN DRIVE WITH BROWNS

Special to Boston American

St. Louis, Mo., May 2—The Boston Red Sox come to town today to battle the St. Louis Browns in three games which will settle temporary possession of the American League cellar.

Both clubs started the season with high hopes of remaining far removed from the basement from start to finish, but the opening of the second month of the campaign finds the Sox at the bottom of the heap and the Browns only a half game above.

Marty McManus, Boston, pilot, blames the plight of his club on the fact that it has been tangled up with the Yanks, Senators and Athletics ever since the race started. He expects his boys to clean up on this Western trip and return home at the top of the second division.

Gordon "Dusty" Rhodes, who in three starts this season has lost three five-hit games, will go to the hill for the Sox this p. m. Manager Bill Killefer of the locals has an idea he will call upon his ace George Blaeholder.

Garnsey Replaces Shepard as Stroke

New Haven, Ct., May 2 (INS)—Bill Garnsey today sat at stroke in the varsity Yale crew, replacing Shepard. Head Coach Ed Leader shifted his men about again yesterday with less than a week of training left before the Derby Day regatta.

Shepard last week replaced Johnny Jackson, stroke last year who was moved to No 6 where he remained yesterday. Garnsey rowed No. 6 last year. All other boatings remained the same as during recent workouts.

Charles "Red" Hoffman was elected chairman and Gene Dooley, secretary-treasurer. The umpires discussed different plays that come up in the course of a ball game.

Among the umpires who attended the meeting were Hoffman, Gene Dooley, Ada Hart, "Duke" Dolan, Eddie Nestor, Phinney Edwards, "Peachy" Nichols, "Senator" Kelly, "Shackles" Daly and Jimmy Clancy.

By PAT ROBINSON

New York, May 2 (INS)—This is the jinx year for athletes. Several have been killed in mishaps outside the sports arena, some have been crippled for life; others, while not permanently injured, have been hurt severely enough to end their athletic careers, and scores have been so seriously hurt they may not compete for a year.

Over the week-end Bob Nozene crac kquarter miler of the University of Southern California, suffered the amputation of a leg following his auto crash in which he and three other Trojan athletes were hurt.

Earlier in the year, the athletic world was shocked when Lt. Cmdr. George Calnan, Olympic fencing star, went to his death in the fall of the ill-fated dirigible Akron.

TRACK TOLL HEAVIEST

Sportsmen had hardly recovered fro mthis blow when word came that George Saling, the University of Iowa's Olympic hurdle champion, had been killed in an auto smash.

Bill Carr, world's greatest quarter miler, was all set to hang up more track records for the University of Pennsylvania, when he had the misfortune to be in an auto accident that cost him two broken ankles and wrote finis to a brilliant career.

Not long since three Canadian basketball stars were killed in the fall of an airplane soon after leaving Tulsa, Oklahoma.

EASTMAN AND CARR

Next came Nelson Gray, I. C. 4 shot put champion with a severely wrenched back which is nothing for a shot putter to cheer about and Bill Miller, Olympic pole vaulting king banged up a foot and gave up the pole for a pair of crutches.

JINX HITS KIESEL

By this time the athletic world was growing dizzier than a blonde on her tenth bottle of 3-2 when word drifted in from the coast that Bob Kiesel, intercollegiate sprint champion and one of the four who set a new world 400 meter relay record in the Olympics, had fallen off a horse and so aggravated an old leg injury he probably will never compete again.

And the last seen of quarter-miler Tettlebaum of Ohio State, he looked as if he'd been in a losing battle with a dozen Jack Dempseys, when, as a matter of fact, he was just another of the auto victims.

Al Kelly, Georgetown's crack sprinter, pulled a leg hard enough Saturday to put him on the shelf for a year, and only yesterday Bill Hall, Pittsburgh's corking freshman tackle, who was expected to be a standout on the varsity this fall, died following infection of a mere scratch on his nose.

Where will it all end? If this keeps up, dealers in rabbit's feet may expect a rushing business.

Victoria, B. C., May 2 (AP)—The two basketball playing sons of Lester Patrick, manager and president of the New York Rangers of the National Hockey League, today had put the Victoria Blue Ribbons back in the running for the Dominion championship with a 38-32 triumph over the Windsor Walkerville alumni.

Patrick, two sons, Lynn and Muzz, scored nearly two thirds of Victoria's points as the Blue Ribbons rallied from the crushing 40-24 defeat of the first game to even the series with the Eastern Canada champions.

6 CLUBS DICKER FOR QUINN

New York, May 2 (INS)—Jack Quinn, the veteran pitcher, has not yet run out his major league string.

Six big league teams today are understood to have made offers to the most hall flinger and it is certain that his baseball career in the big time will be extended for another year, at least.

Boston and Cincinnati in the National League and four clubs in the American League are reported to be angling for Quinn unconditionally released by the Dodgers on Saturday.

If Quinn accepts one of the offers and plays out the season it will permit him to realize his ambition of completing 30 active years as a pitcher. He started mound work with the Connecticut club of the Pennsylvania State League in 1903.

Farr Is Outpointed by Kid Chocolate

Taking it easy for the most part, apparently looking to his featherweight championship tilt with Seaman Watson next week, the Cuban uncorked his heavy bombardment in the 10th round to floor the plucky Clevelander three times.

The verdict for the Cuban "boy wonder" was unanimous with both judges and Referee Joe McGuigan voting for him.

Western Invasion Opens With Reds Tackling Braves

By JOE CASHMAN

Little Donie Bush, one of baseball's grander guys, pops up in our midst again today. This time he is leading the Cincinnati Reds against the hustling heroes of the House of McKechnie in a three-game series, which marks the opening of the first Western invasion of the Wigwam.

In the course of the next few months the Little Colonel of the Queen City will have plenty to say about the fortunes of the Braves, but for the present he is merely another big league pilot who is trying to keep his charges in the first division. Donie has performed that task in many different years, and if his present outfit is anywhere near as good as the 1919 world champions, which he piloted, the Senators, Pirates and White Sox and he have been there, they will be in the thick of the pennant fight.

Donie, a native Hoosier, started baseball career in Indianapolis. He was a fast infielder for the Indianapolis club of the American Association when Joe Howell, Washington pilot, was a member of the Reds and when Donie started managing in the Queen City he had Howell on his team.

DONIE A HARD WORKER

But the Donie never stacked up as only the right man of any team with whom he was connected with them. He once took over a West Baden club that had finished last in the Indiana State League and steered it home a third place. He was also a Pittsburgh pilot for a year or two, and then went to Washington and promptly copped off a pennant. Only with the White Sox did he ever fail to land the first division, and he failed in the World Series to be scored as more unfortunate than inefficient.

The little fellow is going to have his troubles steering the Reds into the money this season, but so far he has kept them out of the basement they were supposed to occupy all the way and, if given a free rein, will probably keep them out.

Bush is one of four pre-season picks of baseball experts to beat out the Reds will please the local fans this p. m. Jim Bottomley, after years in St. Louis, finds himself in the two months to date, defeating Amherst and losing to Princeton. Brown defeated B. U. and Boston College.

Otto Bluege, brother of the Senators' star at second, James Moore secured from the Cubs in the deal for Babe Herman, is playing center. Barry, Rice and Cronin are all with the Browns. Tigers and Yanks, is in right.

Our old friend Bobby Smith, ex-Braves pitcher, and Rally Hamilton, veteran retriever, both secured from the Cubs along with Moore are also with the club.

The veterans include Chick Hafey, in left; Sassy Leo Durocher at short; Joe Morrissey, former Holy Cross star, at third; Ernie "Schnozz" Lombardi back of the bat, and Gene Gia chetti. Wally Roettger and Andy Hoar doing relief duty.

With Chick Hafey, who was ill most of last year, back in his championship batting form of 1931 and a great left-handed hitter in Bottomley the Reds are games stronger than they were a year back. Pinning is the club's weakness. St. Johnson and Red Lucas are the only reliable flingers on the club's payroll. Is there twice that many at least, to make a really dangerous club? Lucas, showing 13 out of 22 games from the Braves last year, but they weren't licking the current Wigwam outfit.

There was no Frank Hogan in Tuesday's last season masterminding pitchers to victory and holding down fences; no Dick Gyselman paying the best third base in the league; no Maranville kneeling the cover off the ball, no Berger hitting three home runs in the series and no Fullenstin hurling shutout ball.

The 1933 Braves, with four straight victories and a jump from the cellar to fifth place to their credit in the last three days, don't intend to stop until they reach the top. And nobody will stop them, either as long as they keep on displaying the gilt-edged pitching, timely hitting, spectacular fielding and perfect strategy they showed over the week-end.

Bostonians Head for Louisville Downs

By GEORGE UNDERWOOD

Boston's advance guard of Kentucky Derby visitors have been in the Blue Grass country for more than a week, but the real exodus of the New England racing clans will not start until tomorrow when the Derby Special pulls out from the South Station at 1.30 p. m. headed for Old Kaintuck.

The 300 expected to leave here on the Derby Special tomorrow will be augmented by Worcester, Springfield and Pittsfield detachments and close to 1000 New Englanders will be rooting out of their berths at the Derby Special pulls down through the Blue Grass country Friday morning.

Over the weekend New England was given a touch of the weather which hovers over the Blue Grass country at Derby time. It's May on the calendar but it's June down in the Blue Grass where the jasmine and the honeysuckle are blooming and the mocking birds are singing in the magnolias.

The New England racing contingent all have choice seats in the box stand at Churchill Downs That box stand on Saturday, with the cream of racing and society folk from all over the country filling it to the strong, looking like a bluebell of California poppies rioting in the wind, will be a wonderful sight as the call to post is sounded.

But if you're looking for human interest at Churchill Downs you should visit the special stand reserved for the colored people. They have a grandstand all reserved to themselves and there you will find the whole family, from Grampa and Granma down to the pickaninnies.

Once in a while the millenium comes to Louisville. It came back in 1913, when Stone Street came under the wire at 60 to 1, and again in 1913, when Donerail, paying $181 for each $2 bet, was added to the illustrious dynasty of Kentucky Derby winners.

LANE OUT AS B. U. COACH

A new football coaching staff was being sought for Boston University today, as Myles Lane, last fall head coach, and Assistants John McManmon and Tony Colucci are through.

The B. U. authorities wanted Lane to return, with a cut of his salary of 28 per cent, which he refused to accept.

Lane was very popular at Boston University last fall and his reappointment was well received. The ex-Dartmouth athlete did not accept the re-appointment and did not say whether or not he would return. Lane did say that he would not accept a cut. As Lane made no further move the authorities have taken it for granted that he is not coming back. They are now searching for a new coaching staff.

The students and some of the football men will do everything in their power to get Lane back, but in the opinion of the authorities it is impossible. The B. U. authorities claim they have not fired Lane, but that it is simply a question of salary difference and he will not coach at the money offered.

The new coaching staff will probably be selected when the faculty council meets May 20. They have no successors in mind and it is believed that there will be many men interviewed within the next two weeks.

The B. U. Student Athletic Council has resigned in a body, claiming that it should have been consulted before changes in the budget were made.

Bull to Try Tackle on Dean at Arena

Martin has been working on a flying tackle at the gym, after learning that the Man Mountain's only recent defeat was at the hands of Gus Sonnenberg, who crushed him with a butt.

HORNSBY ROW STORY FALSE, SAYS GRIMM

He settled down on a divan still chuckling to himself, but favoring a crick in his back that is keeping him on the bench.

"Everything is going to be all right," he announced cheerfully, "as soon as we start hitting. Bill Cuyler's leg is healing fine and he'll be back in uniform in three weeks. We've been getting grand pitching, but no runs. We still need a left handed pitcher, and how have you been?"

There's not a suspicion of truth, Charley says, in stories from the Mid-West that he has been battling with Rogers Hornsby and even threatened to drag him out of the Cardinal dressing room.

"I don't believe he ever said I undermined him when he was managing my club," he said earnestly. "That doesn't sound like Hornsby. I played hard for him and he treated me like a ball player. I never thought of undermining anybody. We've talked several times since he left the Cubs."

SMITH TRAINS FOR GARDEN GO

Jimmy Smith of Philadelphia, who meets Johnny Indrisano in a 10-round bout at the Boston Garden on Friday night, has started training at Kelley & Hayes' Gym on Hanover st. The 21-year-old youngster is confident he will win from the East Boston welterweight.

Smith has engaged in 61 bouts, and has lost only six decisions.

The ten-round semifinal will bring together Al McCoy of Waterville, Me., and Tommy King of Fall River. King recently returned East following a campaign of two years on the Coast.

Ex-$400 2-Year-Old Among Derby Choices

By BILL CORUM

New York, May 2 (US)—Friends, allow me to present Mr. Khayyam of Westbury, Long Island. Mr. Khayyam is a son of Omar Khayyam, but not the Omar Khayyam that petitioned for a jug of wine, a loaf of bread and his girl friend underneath a bough.

The Omar Khayyam I'm speaking of is a horse. Which also makes Mr. Khayyam a horse. You can't fool me.

Omar Khayyam is the only foreign horse ever to win a Kentucky Derby. That was in 1917.

I wouldn't be writing about Mr. Khayyam today except that he is a home town boy that has made good. He was brought up right here among us.

MR. KHAYYAM OF CATAWBA

What with the original Omar being quite a hand for filling the cup and dancing with grape leaves in his hair, it is fitting that Mr. Khayyam should hail from Catawba Farm—catawba being a kind of grape and the sweet wine that comes from it.

Catawba Farm is at Westbury, L. I., and is owned by Mrs. James M. Austin. In addition to race horses, Mrs. Austin grows rabbits and it may have been his boyhood associations with the papas and mamas of Easter eggs that makes Mr. Khayyam run like a scared rabbit through the stretch.

They tell me that the rabbits of Catawba Farm are the most expensive rabbits grown in the United States, some of them costing almost as much and being almost as large as the horses on the place (If you could grow a rabbit big enough to carry a little jockey, I wonder if they'd let you run him in the Derby?)

Some of my friends drove out to Catawba Farm the other afternoon to see the gray stallion, Ramoneur, which stands there. That morning a baby colt had been born and the mother had died. So Mrs. Austin had ordered half the barn torn down so the little fellow could get some sunshine in his stall and was having him fed from a milk bottle.

MRS. AUSTIN KNOWS HORSES

She loves horses, knows how to ride them, though she still clings to a side-saddle, and will undoubtedly be the happiest lady in the country if Mr. Khayyam can do next Saturday in the Derby what he did last in the Chesapeake Stakes at Havre de Grace.

Certainly off his two races this spring, Mr. Khayyam must be given a blue-ribbon chance. He has been out twice and won twice, which is an even 1000 per cent in all leagues.

Mr. Khayyam is another object lesson in how little anybody knows about a race horse. He was a $400 yearling at Saratoga, and this time last spring he was running with other $400 two-year-olds, which is to say with the bum of the class.

He was in at least one $2000 claiming race at Belmont last spring and nobody wanted him. Now he boasts a grand chance to knock $50,000 off the tree in one gallop. And that's life around the barns for you, mates. It's what makes horse racing.

But enough of this Derby chatter for today. I just thought you'd like to know about the Long Island lady who owns horses and rabbits and rides side saddle and will, no doubt, be keeping her fingers crossed all this week for fear Mr. Khayyam will stub his toe or something.

And this bureau certainly wishes her luck. Anything to keep the ladies happy, say we. When they're happy they don't bawl you out for dropping ashes on the rugs, or blowing on your coffee after you've poured it in your saucer.

CRIMSON NINE TO FACE BRUINS

Brown University's baseball team will attempt to repeat the victory of its football team when it clashes with the Harvard club at Soldiers Field tomorrow afternoon.

The Brown nine will line up with Gilmartin on first; Caito, second; S. Henshaw, third; C. H. Burt, shortstop; Capt. A. F. Kroeger, center field; F. G. Munroe, right field; E. A. Tracy, left field; H. E. Fowler, catcher.

Derby Eligibles Get Test Today

Louisville, Ky., May 2 (AP)—If you believe what the "long shot boys" tell you at Churchill Downs these days you will be justified in reaching the conclusion that all the favorites for the $50,000 added classic Saturday will jump the fence or drop dead in the stretch.

But all of this misconception of information was to be clarified somewhat with the running today of the Preparation Purse, a mile race at the Downs which drew a field of ten candidates for Saturday's event.

Led by Charley O., and Head Play, co-favorites the field included At Top, Warren, Jr., Isaiah Boilermaker, Flingal, Thistle Pin, Ben Minturn and Knockaway.

Stanford Golfers Travel

Stanford University, Cal., May 2 (INS)—Plans were being considered today to send the Stanford golf team to the National Intercollegiate golf championship at Buffalo next month.

Dempsey Is Magnet for Scant 600

Hartford, Ct., May 2 (INS)—Jack Dempsey and Max Baer came here late yesterday, talked over the radio, handed out scores of autographs, had an informal testimonial dinner and then appeared as headliners at a boxing show in Foot Guard Hall. They attracted few more than 600 fans.

Baer aroused little interest in an exhibition with two sparring partners, but the former world champion, who refereed two bouts, was enthusiastically cheered.

Dempsey, the most heavyweight now training for his bout with Max Schmeling, appeared to take the exhibition lightly.

Gastanaga Ill; Off King-Retzlaff Card

Chicago, May 2 (AP)—An eight-round bout between Martin Levandowski and Mickey Patrick of Chicago will replace the semi-final originally scheduled between Isidore Gastanaga of Spain, and Salvatore Ruggerello, on the King Levinsky-Ernie Retzlaff card.

The substitution became necessary when Gastanaga was forced to withdraw due to a severe attack of sinus trouble.

Voice of Broadway

— By Louis Sobol —

Snapshots at Random!

The first I've seen in town . . . One of those lemonade cans converted into a beer cart . . . On the Bowery, near Pell st., yesterday afternoon . . . The sign read: "Beer—2c, 3c, 5c a glass—Real Beer" . . . Nice gesture on the part of the Ha-Ha Club bunch Wednesday night. Someone had told him a Broadway columnist and his wife were celebrating their fourteenth wedding anniversary . . . Half an hour after the coupe entered, waiters walked in with a large cake topped by fourteen lighted candles and Dan Healy made a speech . . . Rather sentimental business, especially in a giddy night club, but it was nice just the same . . . Peter Arno and Evelyn Crowell. Billy Leeds and Olive Hamilton sat along side of us . . . Arno told us he was creating a new jig-saw puzzle in which every individual piece would represent a gargoyle, or an animal, or perhaps a columnist . . . Mark Hellinger enters with Gladys Glad beaming at his side and Seymour Felix complaining of a code in the head.

The Mayfair closes for the season Saturday night and a goodly bunch of Broadwayites and Park Avenuites are present for the obsequies . . . A. C. Blumenthal with Beth Leary at one table, for instance, and Peggy Fears with John Harkride at another, and neither speaks nor takes notice of the other . . . Lupe Velez is there with Sailing Baruch, Jr., for a change, and Bobbe Arnst slops in chat with her, which is the height of magnanimity, I presume, not being up much on the strange ways of gals who meet the current flame of ex-spouses . . . A pretty picture—Nancy Carroll in black picture hat . . . Later at Reuben's in time to see the departing form of my "support" at the Rivoli, Maurice Chevalier . . . I settle down to chat with Johnny Walker and Rig Hindiman and his handsome bride . . . Hindleman urges me to hold on to my diamonds because the value of them is soaring steadily, nor can he understand my complete indifference . . . not being aware that if there is anything I have less of these days, it's diamonds . . .

At the Lyceum Theater, Tuesday night, I stand conversing with Tommy Jackson, Jack and Evelyn Crowell when I observe a goofy-panned gent with an adenoidal expression, mumbling . . . What I manage to grasp is that it is high time Hitler came to America and that it will be a merry day for all concerned when he does, whereupon somebody shoves him off to the next aisle and he leaves waving his bands . . . The premiere is that of "Man Bites Dog," play of which promises judging from the title and the fact that Leo Donnelly is in the role of a manager, a hit, but I flounders about wordily and never quite gets anywhere, although we get a good idea of the situation where a flamboyant gal shoots her husband dead in the office of the tabloid that's about him dead all over again when he refuses to stay dead after the extra has put on the finishing . . .

Thursday night, at another opening . . . "Nine Pine Street" at the Longacre, in which Lillian Gish forgets to change her clothes, and neatly murders her papa and step-mama and I could almost love her for it in this case at any rate . . . O. O. McIntyre forgets his usual stiffness and almost applauds when Lillian reaches for the shovel, or was it tongs" with which she plans to tap her step-papa over the head . . . Friday night to still another opening, a picture this time, at the Rialto . . . "Reunion in Vienna," with John Barrymore in another characterization in which he plays an old roue and turns in one of the swellest performances of his career . . . And for the first time (although I saw her in "Cavalcade") I can understand why they make such a fuss about this Diana Wynyard . . . An actress of beauty and charm.

Later to a side street rendezvous known as the Stanley Grill in one of those funny little hotels that dot the streets arming out from Broadway. No fancy frills in this place. It looks more like one of those old time saloons that you see in the movies, where the aristocratic ones tossed out into the streets by an irate papa, wanders in to meet a sweet but illiterate gal and she saves him from himself. At any rate, Michael Angelo is sitting here with some friends, and I stop to chat with him. I once told you about Angelo. His collection of rare etchings, paintings, tapestries and sculptory . . . I learn that his latest prize is a robe fashioned by the Michael Angelo of another era for a Pope

PRESIDENT ON THE AIR

Secretary of State Cordell Hull Speaking From Washington Tonight at 10:30

By N. F. T.

Among the microphone high spots this week will be found the period allotted to President Roosevelt on Thursday night. The Chief Executive is scheduled to address the United States Chamber of Commerce meeting in Washington at 11:30 p. m. As per custom, when the nation's head speaks in public, both major networks carry his voice from coast to coast. Stations WEEI and WNAC will serve the New England area.

* * *

Meanwhile, the Chamber of Commerce sessions are affording Secretary of State Hull, who will be the guest speaker tonight. He is to be heard only over WAAB facilities. The time is 10:30, and, unfortunately, not available through WBZ-WBZA because of previous arrangements made locally.

These big meetings at the Capitol are attended by such captains of industry as Gerard Swope, head of the General Electric Co., Gen. W. W. Atterbury, Pennsylvania Railroad mogul and others of outstanding prominence in American business life. Nightly gatherings constitutively discuss all of the major problems involved in the nationwide recovery program with which the Roosevelt administration is engrossed. All of which will command attention in far reaching circles during the balance of this week.

ONE-MAN OUTFIT.

An enjoyable discussion of broadcasting developments since the "early days" and winning 1927-28, spontaneously took place last night. Equipment, for example. How well the one-time "station director" of WPAW in Pawtucket remembers holding a bicycle bell on a string, striking it sharply with his pencil to furnish effective time signals. Naturally at so much the Ergela per wheark. But indeed his "Bell Ringer" role was nothing. Playing the piano after being announced as a "10-year-old boy" proved a popular feature. Then stopping short to answer the telephone, hastily slapping on a phonograph record en route through the door between "studio" and "office" was another regular occurrence.

RECEPTION ROOM

A dark winding stairway led up from the street, says our program pioneer. He invariably approached the head of the rickety flight with a two-foot lead pipe in his hand. There were very good obvious threats of violence by phone if he didn't agree to give auditions to mediocre performers. Those were the days when a "10-year-old boy" was all the equipment essential as would make good comic "mike" material at present. Station boss then would daily consent to "shihi out these days. His prize laugh provoking yarn has to do with the broadcaster who said over the listeners" thought WPAW had hooked up with a coast to coast network. Let's leave that one for this space tomorrow. Watch closely, it's a pippin!

MAT REVENGE GEORGE'S GOAL

By RINGSIDE

Ed (Strangler) Lewis has been signed to meet Ed Don George, world's heavyweight wrestling champion, in a finish bout, best two falls out of three, at the Boston Garden, on May 17, under the direction of Paul Bowser.

Wrestling, like other sports, has its pet feuds. The most intense feud is the one that exists between Lewis and George.

Lou Daro, Los Angeles promoter who at one time staged mat bouts in this city, asked George to meet Lewis. The latter had held the championship on numerous occasions. He was the Dempsey of the mat game, and George was eager to add him to his list of victims.

Lewis furnished George with a surprise when he defeated him in straight falls. George demanded a return bout, but was refused. Then DeGlane defeated Lewis and George started chasing the Frenchman.

Now, more than two years later George is going to receive his opportunity to try to get revenge, while the Strangler has a chance to become champion again.

Diamond Dust

—By JOE CASHMAN—

While the rest of the National League clubs were idle, the Pirates increased their first-place lead to two full games by blanking the last-place Phillies, 10 to 0.

Bill Swift, who did the whitewashing, also helped himself to three hits. So did Earl Grace, his battery mate, who connected for a home run and two singles. Paul Waner and Pie Traynor were other Bucs who smashed out a trio of safeties.

Indians Move Up

The only game in the American League saw the Indians wallop the White Sox, 8 to 1. The victory put the Peckmen into a third-place tie with the Windy City entry, which had been deadlocked with the Senators for second place. The winners found a quintet of Chicox hurlers for 10 hits, including a home run and double by Burnett, a homer by Vosmik, a triple by Porter and two doubles by Averill, while Oral Hildebrandt was pitching five-hit ball for his fourth win in as many starts.

The American League continues to lead the National in home run production by a ratio of almost 2 to 1. The junior circuit sluggers have pounded out 80 circuit drives as compared to 32 manufactured to date in the senior loop.

The New York-Penn League, which includes the Braves' Harrisburg farm and Bob Quinn's Reading entry, opens its season today. Boston fans' wish for the former Red Sox "greasy" is that his new berth will bring him all the success that he richly deserved but never enjoyed at the Fens.

The departure of Earl Clark, veteran outfielder, to Albany leaves the Braves with only 25 players, or only two more than the limit, which will go into effect on May 15 this season.

Rabbit Greatest

Rabbit Maranville has long been rated one of the greatest infielders in the history of the game. Why not THE greatest? Honus Wagner was all through in his 22d season. The inimitable midget of the Tribe is playing the finest ball of his career in his 24d year under the big top.

Concord Bob Ashy missed a visit to his family and friends out in Concord by a day. As he was packing his bags to come here with the Reds, the former catcher was released unconditionally.

Schoolboy Jumps 6 Feet, 6½ Inches

Los Angeles, May 2 (AP) — Cornelius Johnson, Los Angeles high schoc' high jumper who placed third in the 1932 Olympic games, bettered the world's interscholastic record when he leaped 6 feet, 6¼ inches in a city league meet.

U. S. OPEN GOLF ENTRIES DROP

Probably not more than 800 golfers will have filed entries when the deadline is reached at 6 p. m. tonight. There were 550 in hand yesterday.

Sectional qualifying round play for the open will be played May 15 with the finals at Chicago June 8-9-10.

Leto to Fight Cocoa Kid

Holyoke, Mass., May 2 (AP) — Jimmy Leto, 134, Hilford, and Cocoa Kid, New Haven, today were matched for the 10-round main bout in the Valley Arena here Monday night.

CUP GAMES ON SOCCER CARD

A trio of semifinal cup games and a host of league games are listed on the soccer program for Sunday, with the feature game at Worcester between the Worcester Scandinavians and the Swedish Sport Club of Springfield.

These elevens will meet in the western semifinal of the State cup and the winner will meet the defending champion, Clan McGregor, in the final at a later date.

Clan McGregor has also an important contest scheduled as it meets the Dorchester Waverly at Lincoln Park in the semifinal of the Mayor James M. Curley cup competition.

The elevens met at Quincy two weeks ago and the result was a 3-to-1 tie.

The winner of this tilt will oppose the St. Pius eleven in the two-game final for the trophy.

The other semifinal cup tilt is in the Victoria cup competition and will have the Lynn Riversides as the Swedish F. C. of Cambridge facing off at Smith Field, Brighton.

The winner of this game will meet the Revere Corinthians, which defeated South Lawrence to reach the final.

Many thinkers contend that ignorance of the masses is the gravest problem confronting our complex civilization.

"Rackets are easy to stop."—Samuel J. Foley, N. Y. District Attorney.

"Sex and gangsters are passe."—Samuel Goldwyn.

FRISBY MAKES ANOTHER STRIDE FORWARD WITH NEW BEER REGULATIONS

Washington.—Congressman Horace Walpole Frisby, who calls himself the Hitler of America, has joined hands with both wets and drys.

"My idear," says Frisby, who, by the way, is suffering from a slight attack of sniffles, "is to offer leadership to all factions. Take this here, now, beer bill. To the wets I say 'Prosit.' To the drys a say, 'Adjeal her to the Soupreme Court, boys!' Personally, while I have beer in the house, I enforce local regulations. All guests in my home are required to drink two quarts of the water before being served beer. I have also removed all upholstering from the chairs and substituted carpet tacks. And instead of using mugs, steins or glasses, I serve beer in a bowl—with a spoon and two crackers.

NEW ENGLAND'S GREATEST EVENING NEWSPAPER

BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 2, 1933

LARGEST EVENING CIRCULATION BY MORE THAN 75,000

Boston's Answers to Its Professional Fault Finders

Business is improving.

The banks have strengthened their position. There should be no more closings of any re-opened banks.

We have at last begun the uphill climb toward the crest of success, and the faces of the people are again lighted by the prospect of general happiness.

* * *

Boston is the metropolis of New England.

Boston is surely the Hub, and it may be said in all truth that when the Nation makes its appraisal of New England it naturally turns first to the conditions in the city of Boston.

* * *

In the 111 years of its existence as a chartered community, the city of Boston has never defaulted a financial obligation.

It has met its bonds. It has paid its notes.

In the past 16 years it has expended $40,000,000 for school lands and buildings.

In the past three years it has expended at the rate of almost $12,000,000 annually for the public relief of its people.

Unlike almost every other large city in this country, it has met the heavy drains of the times from its current revenue. It has paid its bills of the day. It has not met these extraordinary obligations by mortgaging the future through bond issues.

The city of Boston has balanced its budget.

The city of Boston has the lowest percentage of uncollected taxes of any of the great cities of comparative size in this country.

At the recent conferences of mayors, it was unanimously agreed that the cities of Boston and Milwaukee led all the other great communities of the Nation in financial solvency and security.

You will hear at New York, at Washington, at Chicago and at Philadelphia, that Boston and New England weathered the storm of the past three years with greater independence and financial solidarity than any other section of America.

They all agreed that Boston and New England were in the strongest condition possible to lead the march of economic recovery.

Let us be united.
Let us all pull together.

If the rest of the country looks upon us as the brightest ray in the diadem of the States, surely we have the right to be proud of our position.

We have the duty to recognize that we can maintain that position if we all stand shoulder to shoulder, in perfect and complete harmony.

This is the time for professional trouble-makers and political snipers to retire and permit our officials to carry on their work.

Why Was McKnight Permitted to Remain So Long a Banker?

Edwin T. McKnight, the bank president juggler of millions of dollars of other people's money has been sent to jail as a common thief, there to spend the next six or seven years of his life among criminals whose crimes have not so far spread as much hardship among their fellowmen.

McKnight was found guilty by a jury and was sentenced by Judge Collins for conspiring to bribe city officials and for employing his dominance in the bank as an avenue for collecting illegal fees on bank loans.

This man's conviction was a surprise to the community.

He had been tried on innumerable charges and on countless indictments and had escaped them all.

The community was used to saying, "McKnight is on trial again; he will get out of it again."

Well, he just didn't get out of it this time. The public temper and the jury temper has changed, after three years of depression and after the frequent exposure of errant bank officials who have degenerated their stewardship of the people's money into a common racket.

McKnight came to this country a humble young man without prestige or influence. He had a singular ability. His adopted country afforded him a splendid opportunity for the exercise of that ability. He was elected to the public office and ultimately became President of the State Senate, a post of distinction which has been occupied by Calvin Coolidge and other great and noble men.

McKnight dissipated the honors which had been bestowed upon him. He accumulated bank charters or bank control, through a combination of his ability and his political influence, and many thousands of Massachusetts people have suffered and still suffer from the financial turmoil which resulted in the banks he dominated.

He is now an old man, at 69. His health is broken. The honors and wealth he accumulated vanish as the click of the lock in his cell terminates his career.

There is no disposition on the part of this newspaper to gloat over the dishonor that finally has come to McKnight, nor to hold him up to the youth of the country as the spectacle in proof of the maxim that only honor and integrity pay in the long run.

But there is one point that must be stated lest our people forget it and lest our public officials continue to ignore it.

Why was the errant banker, McKnight, allowed to stay so long in the banking business in this Commonwealth when it was common knowledge that the people's funds were being dissipated in the banks in which he exercised control?

It is a dozen years since the Fidelity Trust Company was seized by the State. The official reports of the then Banking Commissioner declared that the banking practises of the McKnight bank violated not only the ethics of honorable banking but the laws of the Commonwealth as well.

Despite this grave indictment, McKnight was allowed to resume the banking business and to stay in it until at least two more of the banks he operated were obliged to shut their doors.

Banking conditions are good in Massachusetts today. But they would have been even better, there would have been less suffering caused to depositors, if the State officials had acted with the certainty and the finality with which the jury and Judge Collins have acted in the latest case of Banker McKnight.

Stop Sweating Labor!

President Roosevelt, in his message to the Governors of industrial States concerning the need of minimum wage laws, wisely recognized that prosperity cannot return until the orgy of wage slashing definitely ends.

By its indifference to wage rates society has surrendered the pivotal question of determining living standards to competitive private interests.

If a bottom had been fixed by law below which wages could not fall, all competitors would have been equally affected and each would have been at least as well off as today.

While individual concerns in competitive industries failed to benefit from the savings on wage expenditures, business in the aggregate suffered acutely from the decline in consumer buying power.

"Strange Gods"

They are the peoples who have—as the Hebrew Prophet said—"made idols according to their understanding"—and these idols of Europe are all called Dictatorship.

In this country, our Democratic Congress—elected because it was Democratic—seems willing to abdicate its Constitutional rights, and to walk like Europe in the ways of Ephraim.

But why should the Democratic Congress take this un-American action? In the words of William Randolph Hearst:

"Why should it follow after strange gods when the tenets of its own faith have brought it to the land of promise?"

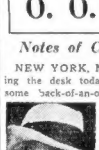
Notes of Celebrities

NEW YORK, May 2—In clearing the desk today I came upon some back-of-an-old-envelope jottings made at the annual Dutch Treat dinner a few weeks ago. They were for no purpose—merely idle observations of artists and writers who dotted the various tables and are reproduced with slight editing:



O. O. McIntyre

W. F. Bigelow, who least resembles an editor, pilots one of the most successful magazines . . . Jim Flagg's exactly the same as 20 years ago . . . Fontaine Fox always in need of a hair cut . . . Clare Briggs and Jim Quirk never missed these affairs . . . Don Marquis, rosy cheeked, white haired . . . John Mulholland, writer-magician.

Robert Sherwood tallest fellow here . . . Or anywhere . . . Charlie Towne's bald spot . . . A name for a romantic novel—D'Alton Valentine . . . No writer is such a constant entertainer as Walter Trumbull . . . Marc Connelly grows plumper and Boyden Sparkes thinner . . . Rubie Goldberg's impish grin . . . "Pigs is Pigs" Butler.

C. B. Falls still wears those bangs . . . Boyish and talented Ogden Nash . . . A cricket-like name—Lee Keedick . . . Russell Patterson's the only one with a lapel flower . . . Arthur Train looks so serious . . . Arthur Samuels can tear a piano apart . . . Otto Soglow has as many O's as Otto Floto.

Radio entrepreneurs no longer look upon an artist's fan mail or petites announces in the radio columns as a criterion of success. Too many jacked up their quota by trickery or press agentry. The scope of the deceit was discovered through a new artist who, due to a mechanical breakdown on his first broadcast, spieled through a dead mike. But the station received some 300 letters of praise. Stations now have secret research bureaus which find out a performer's audience reaction in a way unknown to him.

The fiction character with the greatest popularity the past 20 years I could not abide. I refer to Finley Peter Dunne's "Mr. Dooley." My father used to laugh at his observations until his face surged apoplectic purple. I have known few beings save myself, who did not find him amusing. I can account for it only because of a distaste for dialect coupled, of course, with a thick sense of humor. But I still think it high inanity and am glad it's erstwhile.

A figure in the Broadway flow is Lou Davis, who when not attending his wholesale butchery business, writes words and music for sentimental ditties. He is one of the piano improvisors who can hold a silent circle knotted about until the final note. His best known tune, "That Precious Little Thing Called Love," made a sizable fortune. His boon companion is Harry Richman.

I notice Amelia Bingham's home on Riverside is shorn of its crazy bristle of heroic statutary. The facade was niched for marble figures of Shakespeare, Goethe, Farragut, Abraham Lincoln and a bust of Napoleon. The mansion seems deserted and in growing decay. Further south the Charles M. Schwabs' residence was also crepuscular with gloom, the iron puddler statues in the yard sadly needing whatever iron puddler statues need to make them all merry and bright.

* * *

I have perfected a dandy jabberwock for eavesdroppers who cup an ear to private conversation in cafes or elsewhere. Like this: "Alma dopcka shannon sokup mableyc rrewe"—and a few other names of Cincinnati stores. It sounds fearfully continental and certainly bewilders the nibby.

Quatrains

Facts

The facts, like drunken women fallen low,
Few men will bravely face;
'Tis easier to think they are not so,
And seek a cleaner place.

Counsel

Let him who will be clever. This be you:
Honest and gentle, stout of heart and kind;
Be wide of eye to all that you must do,
But to the fault in others partly blind.

Good and Ill

Men take for granted what is vile and base
As if themselves would do it if they could,
But calmly sit like judges on a case

Words

Who deals in words should weigh them now and then
Upon a scale that has a gentle touch,
And thus make sure he gives his fellow men

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

Last Saturday, in the always interesting Cambridge column of this newspaper, I read with complete agreement what Mr. Raymond A. Fitzgerald of the Cambridge school committee had to say about the "Harvard accent." He is, of course, perfectly correct. The Harvard-Boston accent for which we are burlesqued by the gentry of the Middle West and the South, and even by Yankees and Bostonians who ought to know better, is merely the accent of an educated gentleman, the purest English spoken in these United States.

R. E. ROGERS

It has two characteristics, neither of which is very marked. First is the moderately broad A, second is the slurring or the omission of the R, in pleasant contrast to the saw-tooth R of the Middle West. Only a faker, trying to be more English than the English, exaggerates either of these. In other words, the Lawrence gentleman simply wanted his school boy to speak like a gentleman. The fact that most people do not is obvious. A few years ago in a little book I wrote called "How to Be Interesting" (L. C. Page Co.), I wrote a few pages, which bear on the question of why the Lawrence gentleman should want to give a prize for what he rather unfortunately called the "Harvard accent."

Breathing Plays Big Part in Speech

"Let us turn for a moment to the normal speech of the young American who comes from a home where no attention is paid to such matters and who has never received any formal training. In the past few years I have had to listen very carefully, as part of my job, to some hundreds of young college men, freshmen and sophomores, struggling to deliver short speeches which they have (presumably) thought about and prepared after a fashion, but which they have not learned by heart. It is an extraordinarily instructive experience and one which lends itself, I think, to sound generalization.

"This typical American boy is likely to have a light, narrow jaw, narrow nose, and shallow chest. He has never been taught to breathe deeply. There is often a tendency to adenoids and breathing through the mouth. He has never been taught to use his diaphragm in breathing or speaking. He does most of his speaking from the throat and up behind the nose. His tones, therefore, are usually light, flat, colorless, and probably nasal.

"The American boy does not move his lower jaw when speaking. (What, never? Well—hardly ever!) He moves it as little as is physically possible. He doesn't open his mouth. In speaking, even in public, he holds it like the letter slot in a mail box. The words have to slip out edgewise; the vowels are never long, full, or rounded. And either because of this physical inability to open the mouth, or because of pure slackness and laziness, our young American slurs and telescopes any word of three syllables or more. Pro-bition. Incen-dary. Sci-ntific. Mass-chusetts. Eng-neering. Exper-mental. He elides a troublesome consonant, even in short words. Gover-ment.

"The Homeric hero is always asking: 'What word has escaped the barriers of your teeth?' He wouldn't have to ask that of the American boy. It does not escape. And the boy seldom helps it to escape by pushing it with the breath. His words barely manage to slip out sideways and then fall of their own weight to the floor. They are not projected. There is no force behind them. The last syllable of a word is almost always swallowed. Final n's, nd's, nt's, ing's are inaudible. And what little breath is available for the whole sentence usually dies out half way through, and the last half of the sentence is a rapid die-away descent into breathless inaudibility. The last sentence, which should be climactic, is invariably a self-conscious, sheepish, hasty glissando into the perfunctory and the unemphatic.

"This vulgarity of accent—it is very hard to explain what I mean but I can find no other word for it—is the distinguishing difference between a cultivated and an uncultivated person. And 75 per cent of our school graduates have this vulgarity of accent. One cause is lack of proper speech teaching.

College Man Prides Self on Speech

"The elements of this universal vulgarity of accent seem to me the following: A half-closed mouth and a lazy lower jaw; insufficient breath to push the words out into the air; a lazy ear, which does not take the trouble to listen to the sounds of words; a flat voice, mechanical and monotonous, that makes no effort to speak energetically, emphasize intelligently, pronounce consonants sharply, and give vowels their full value; and, finally, this almost ineradicable habit of slurring, eliding, and swallowing unaccented syllables and unemphatic phrases. The college man who prides himself on being well-dressed to the last detail will speak habitually like a street-corner loafer. He never hears himself and nobody ever thinks to tell him. Incidentally, all this applies equally well to girls."
